best get nearer the car. Evely thought it might be well to give the appearance of having had an accident, so I stood by the car door and tried to look as accidental as possible. The first car approaching slowed down considerably, then all at once gathered speed and fairly rushed by us as did the next.

Ted grew disgusted and Ferd took off his white shoes and set off to trot the two miles to Avon Privette's Philette. He went out of sight with the soles of his feet shining when picked up by the lights of the cars that passed him. We sat in the car, doors and windows shut as closely as possible to keep mosquitoes from devouring us, and in a surprisingly short time Ferd was back with Link Cox and plenty of gasoline. I never realized before how nice Link looks.
