THE END

I have put it, I know, as far from me
As hell has put heaven away;
As forgetting has done with remembering,
As death has done with delay.

I have put it, I know, as far from me
As the stars and the suns are apart;
As a grave has finished with laughter,
As my heart has done with your heart.

Our Government of Balanced Powers

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Among the famous admonitions of George Washington recalled by many Americans on his recent birthday celebration was the following:

"If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the Constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed."

As this is written that admonition remains strongly in the minds of the American people.

Various members of Congress are pointing out in public utterances the necessity of preserving the independence of our three co-ordinate branches of government—Legislative, Executive, and Judicial—as established in the Constitution to safeguard individual liberties.

Nor are their words unheeded, as public sentiment, expressed in the press and in letters to Congress, demonstrates. Seldom has any public question aroused so widespread, non-partisan a discussion.

Undoubtedly this discussion will continue. And that is an encouraging sign in a republic which lists free speech and full discussion of public questions high among the rights of citizens guaranteed under the Constitution.

It is the province of an independent Congress to make our laws; of an independent Executive to enforce them, and of an independent Judiciary to interpret them.
