I SHALL REMEMBER

I shall remember you when Autumn stretches
A gorgeous tapestry across the land;
The blue-gold days, the burning flames of beauty,
Shall find me reaching — groping for your hand.

When Summer trails across the greening meadows,
Gemming each way with blossoms of bright hue,
I shall be blind to all its magic wonder,
Longing for just one whispered word from you.

And when December whirls outside my window
The tattered leaves in sharp and cruel way,
Firelight and lamplight will not warm nor lessen
The winter in my heart — with you away.

But more than all, I shall be aching for you
When Spring comes running through the waiting fields,
When ways we knew, and paths we walked together,
In gay abandonment to April yields
Katherine Edelman.

GENERAL NEWS

SPANISH WAR

Intensive fighting goes on in Spain. While the Loyalists are victorious around Madrid, the insurgents tighten their hold in Bilbao. Foreign soldiers seem to go merrily on killing and cruelly causing the natives to suffer. What it is all about most of us have forgotten and perhaps many of the combatants neither know or care
