"FOR I AM NOT ASHAMED"

These were the words of a man who had given his life for a cause and he still stood with the minority, hated and despised. A visitor in a print shop said, "I would not like to be a printer. It is too dirty, this job of ink and type." The printer rose and stretched his hands. Said he: "I am not ashamed of my hands."

There is a lot of "dirty" work to be done to keep this old world going. Glistening collars and shining shoes are worn by few of the world's workers. Most of us wear overalls and boggans. Our hands are stained and our clothes are soiled. But in throbbing hearts there is a pure motive and an honest purpose to provide for loved ones and add to life. Just as the cleanest body may cover the dirtiest life so may the temporarily dirty body cover the cleanest life.

If your ideal is high, and honest and true, the means to an end are not to be judged by the necessary steps taken, the tools used, nor the physical condition of one's body when the job is done. An honest man in an honest job makes a combination not to be ashamed of. A man may come out of a job unrecognizable for the grease and grime, but if he has done his best, he may stand before kings unabashed and say, "I am not ashamed of my job nor myself."

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Labor has gained both a right and an advantage in the admitted principle of collective bargaining. This eliminates a dangerous element of labor unions, that of business having to deal with a big combine including representatives of most of the laborers in varied industries. There is no more reason for a difference in any particular business having to deal with all labor organizations to settle a local matter than there would be for all big business to form a combine to deal with labor. When a difference is to be settled between General Motors and its employees, then the bargaining should be between representatives of this particular industry and not with John L. Lewis or William Green. Let them stay at home or saw wood or go fishing.

Hereafter it is probable that labor disputes will be settled with less red tape and friction because of this more direct and just way of arriving at a settlement of differences between employer and employee. But it is a bad day for the big unions. Collective bargaining is a victory for labor that both labor and capital will profit by in the future.

WAKELON COMMENCEMENT

Commencements in ordinary affairs are the beginnings, but by chance or deliberate action on the part of some one when we speak of schools and colleges closings we call them commencement. One thinks of life after completion of school more than of what the word signifies.

So we speak of the closing exercises of our local high school as its commencement. The year just closing has been a good one. We have had little sickness among the children, with one exception the weather has been moderate, we have had one of the best faculties in the school's history and we believe both the teachers and students have done good honest work as a whole. No matter from what or whose viewpoint one looks at the closing school year all are to be congratulated.

We publish elsewhere the program of exercises connected with commencement. We hope everyone who can will attend these. The preacher next Sunday night is an Englishman, coming to North Carolina a number of years ago. He is a scholarly and consecrated man. We hope the auditorium will be filled with the people of the community to hear him and to worship. Superintendent Erwin is a young man who has accomplished much in his short term as head of our State school system. He will deliver the address for this occasion, and we are confident it will be one of the best.

Probably the most enjoyable feature of commencement will be the picnic dinner served on the school grounds on Wednesday. This is truly everybody's day. All the community, not only parents and children, but friends will be there. Few will be so engaged that they will not stop long enough to join the thousands making glad in fellowship on this occasion.

When some contrary sentiment appeared in the last P.-T.A. meeting against the annual picnic dinner, it was decided to take a poll of the parents and see if they wanted to continue what has become a sort of community institution. Prof. Moser sent all families letters, asking their opinion about the public dinner. The following morning 118 replies same back and all heartily favored having the picnic dinner except five and some of these did not express an opinion.

So, let everybody get ready to join with our school faculty and help celebrate in a very happy way the closing of another successful year of a school of which all are equally proud. "Here's to Wakelon!"

foremost leaders in their respective fields.

Dr. J. W. Studebaker will deliver the opening address Monday, May 3rd, at 10 A. M., at the John Marshall Hotel. His topic, "Home and School Unite for a Finer Community Life," sounds the keynote for the Convention theme. Monday evening Dr. Forrest Edwin Long will discuss "What is a Literary Community." Mr. A. W.

Whitney and Mr. John Rhodes will speak Tuesday afternoon on "Safety Education in Home and School." "The Health of the Community" is Dr. Thomas H. Parran's theme Tuesday evening. Dr. H. J. Anslinger's address on "Present Day Problems in Alcohol and Narcotics" and Dr. Edward C. Lindemann's address on "Modern Trends and Developments in Public Recreation" are scheduled for Thursday.
