THESE FRAGRANCES

These fragrances with dreams remain:
Wild honeysuckle after rain,
The blossom-clouds of orchard trees,
And clover on a twilight breeze;
The sun in whiteness taken down
From clotheslines dancing, and the brown
Crisp leaves just out of ovens where
An ageless magic fills the air;
The cedar, under shaggy bark,
And oak that breathes across the dark
From camp fires; horse mint with its tang
Of upland pastures; grapes that hang
Miraculous gems along the stone
Of old walls that can stand alone;
Flushed apples, on a bough that swings
Below an arc of glinting wings . . .
And while these fragrances remain
No year, for me, has been in vain.

Miss Mary Louise Robertson was home from her school work at Coats last week, the school having an enforced vacation because of inadequate water supply.

Miss Edna Earle Sexton, Zebulon, junior in the Woman's college of Duke university, is one of those whose names are on the dean's list for the fall semester. These students are granted such privileges as voluntary class attendance, in recognition of their superior scholastic records.

Miss Sexton, daughter of M. J. Sexton, was graduated from Wake-High School, Zebulon, in 1935, where she was prominent in forensics, dramatics, and athletics. She is following the social science course at Duke, is a member of Zeta Tau Alpha national academic sorority, the Y. W. C. A., and Duke Players.

This is Miss Sexton's second year on the Dean's list.
