N. Y. Fair Manager

NEW YORK (Special).—Grover A. Whalen has been re-elected President of the New York World's Fair of 1939 to serve until the close of the international exposition. He has donated his services as chief executive officer of the Fair for the last two years on a part-time basis. Now, however, at the request of the Executive and Finance Committees and the Board of Directors, he has severed all other administrative and executive business connections and will henceforth devote all his energies to the success of the fair.

destroy the sovereignty of the states, are prepared to talk it into oblivion whenever it appears.

REVISION OF BANKRUPTCY ACT: Not a dramatic issue, has good chance of passing.

REGULATION OF NATURAL GAS: Also has good chance of passage.

PLACING POSTMASTERS UNDER CIVIL SERVICE STATUS: Practical everyone agrees this should be done—but not everyone agrees the pending bill is the way to do it. Opponents say the measure would give the Administration a stranglehold on the postmasters, and result in a tremendous political machine. However, the chance for passage seems good.

REPEAL OF SALARY PUBLICITY LAW: Top corporation salaries are now published periodically by the SEC. Opponents say this encourages blackmail, kidnapping, other crimes; is an unwarranted invasion of private rights. Proponents say salary publicity is necessary to protect corporate stockholders from excessive and unjustifiable executive salaries. Chance of passage only fair.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS: Like the civil service for postmasters bill, this measure is based on something that everyone feels is necessary in the interest of governmental efficiency and economy—but a great many people are opposed to the current proposal for the reason that it would place the independent bureaus, such as the FTC and ICC, under the Executive. Chance for passage fair.

This does not exhaust the list of pending measures which have passed one branch, but it lists the most important. It may be some time, however, before most of them are debated—the business recession has greatly changed the legislative outlook. A strong congressional bloc, led by prominent Democrats, feels that Congress should first deal with legislation affecting all business, such as the Capital Gains and Undistributed Profits Taxes, in an effort to stop the decline in production, employment and earnings.

Where's Elmer?

Won't Elmer catch it when he comes home?

No sir, he will not. You don't know Elmer.

He will go by the Zebulon Supply Co.'s furniture Dept. and buy one of those new gadgets they have just received and take it along home with him when he goes.

Why, when his wife sees that combination piece of furniture she will forget all about rolling pins and such like and go for Elmer with a big hug and a resounding kiss.

Listen, men, you had better get wise like Elmer did. Go down to the Zebulon Supply Company store and have Mr. Alford show you that new combination. Got one opened and you have a nice kitchen chair; another, and you have a bedside table; still another, and you have a stepladder; and just one more, and lo, a substantial ironing board. Four pieces of furniture all in one. And—do you know it sells for only $5.95.

Better buy one for your wife's Christmas present. You can get it at

As Congress settles down to work, each branch has on its calendar a sizable list of important laws which were passed at the last session by one of the Houses but not by the other. The status of these bills is not changed by the ending of the first session—they go over into the following session on precisely the same basis as if Congress had not adjourned at all. Some of them will come up in the current special session — those which do not, will come again into prominence when the regular, concluding session of the 75th Congress is called in January. The United States News recently published a summary of the more important acts which have met the approval of one branch, and are yet to be passed or condemned by the other.

The Senate, in its first session, passed several extremely important measures, which are now ready for House of Representatives' scrutiny. These bills are:

WAGES AND HOURS: The bill creates a Federal Board with sweeping powers to establish maximum hours of work and minimum wages, under certain restrictions. It is an Administration "must" measure, and was one of the two desired laws which led to the calling of the special session. Chance for passage in present form is only fair; there is a better chance that extensive revision will be demanded. Business sentiment is solidified against the bill, not, primarily, because of fear of the wages and hours standards it provides, but because of the feeling that the board would be a czar over industry. The business recession, which has resulted in a strong desire on the part of many congressmen to make the special and the next regular session reassuring to industry, has damaged the bill's chances.

CHILD LABOR: Will probably pass, then become an issue in the courts.

WHEAT INSURANCE: Would set up a plan to protect farmers against wheat crop failures. Is highly debatable as a practical measure, but has good chance of passing, perhaps in revised form.

REVISION OF FOOD AND DRUGS LAW: Designed to correct weaknesses and inadequacies in the present law. Will probably pass, though not without strong opposition.

TRAIN LIMIT LAW: Would restrict length of freight trains to 70 cars. Is supported by labor as a make-work measure, opposed by railway management on the grounds that its cost would be unbearable without major rate increases, and it would make operation less safe. House opposition to the law has been growing. Chance of passing seems waning.

CONDEMNATION OF SIT-DOWN STRIKES: This is not a law but an expression of congressional sentiment on a major issue of the time. Has much better chance of passing the House now than it did last session, but it may be tabled and never brought to a vote as many members would prefer to dodge the question.

Important laws passed by the House, and now on the Senate roster include:

THE ANTI-LYNCHING LAW: This has been a burning topic for many years, and at the opening of the special session resulted in a virtual filibuster by Southern members. Poor chance of passing—Southern Senators feel it would
