HEADING UP TO HITLERISM

It was whispered, then spoken out loud that our President wanted to be the Czar of America. And now many seem to believe that was his intention from the first. No matter what interpretation his enemies gave to his acts, his friends, although admitting that it looked that way, would contend that it was all for the good of the people and not personal ambition to rule.

In this paper's opinion, Congress did right in refusing to give the President more power than was ever known before in peace times. The bill will likely pass, but in a form that gives the President less power. We submit these four points to our readers as they appeared in the defeated bill before Congress to permit the President to reorganize the various federal bureaus:

1. The bill provided that the present Civil Service Board (bi-partisan under the existing law) be superseded by a single administrator, to be appointed by the President for a 15-year term.

2. The bill eliminates the "watch dog of the Treasury," the Comptroller-General, and transfers his duties to the budget office named by Presidential appointees.

3. The bill provides that no decision of the President made under the Act can be overridden by Congress without a two-thirds vote.

4. The bill gives to the President 100 per cent control over the quasi-legislative agencies, such as the TVA, which are now responsible to Congress as well as the White House.

Our government no doubt needs reorganizing, but we believe just now the supreme need is the elimination of most of the many alphabetical agencies primarily set up to pull us out of the depression.

THE BIBLE IN BUSINESS

A few days ago I walked into the office of a business man of our town. On his desk was an open Bible. The man himself was in another department. I was reminded by the open Book of what a business man said to me a number of years ago. He said when he was worried over business affairs and felt the need of help he went into a small room at the back of his office and prayed over the matter. And, always, he said, he felt strengthened by the prayer.

The Bible is largely a neglected book by a great many church members. The great principles it teaches for right conduct of business are often forgotten or ignored. The outstanding need of this country today is not a job, tax relief, or even food, however important these may be, but a back-to-the-Bible and its teachings will do more to bring back even material prosperity than all the billions being spent by the government.

I shall watch that man who carries his Bible into his business. He is already succeeding and will succeed the more. According to the teachings of this Book one's best capital is not dug out of the ground nor placed in a bank. It is coined by the conduct of his life and his faithfulness to the everlasting revealed will of God through His Word.

Where's Elmer?!

The gay Easter baskets were pretty, indeed, With lamb, duck, and biddy inside; But where are the eggs for the kiddies to roll, And which Elmer was told to provide?

Though why, Elmer thought, should the children roll eggs, When croquet balls were made for such play?

He decided to give them a new croquet set And went down to buy it that day
