OPEN WINDOWS

Wide open windows are so beautiful.

Letting the garden in, and morning sky—

Shut not the glass against the world, nor pull

The shade or drapery. This house and I

Would drink our fill of glistening fragrant day,

Of aria of bird, and, glad and clear,

The barking of a dog, and love the way

The hills beyond the valley come strangely near.

So beautiful are open windows, all My mind shall know them, too, and morning sun

Of radiant hope and love and trust shall run

Throughout my thinking. These long-shut and small

And dimlit rooms have urgent need of knowing

Their windows opened wide, their curtains blowing!

ALFRED ALLAN PIPPIN

This man of God and servant of the church was born May 26, 1859. Only this week a man guessed his age at sixty-five. His hair barely suggests gray. He walks erect and with an elastic step that night stir the envy of even a young man. He is able to preach twice a day through a revival and the next day do a man's work in his garden. He has through the years stood fearlessly and faithfully for the cause of righteousness. When asked how he had accomplished so much and lived so well, he pointed to his heart and said: "By keeping right in here, by using these hands and by being careful about what went in here," pointing to his mouth.

This preacher of the Gospel is a man whom we delight to honor. For a quarter of a century he has been our friend and yoke-fellow. A fine thing and a worthy one would be or his many friends to plan a great birthday service on the spacious lawn at his home on May 26, next year and celebrate his arrival at the 80th milestone on his journey to the city of God.
