COOPERATION IN DENMARK
Denmark is one of the greatest agricultural countries. According to the Dairyman's League News, "Danish farmers are about the best in the world and the happiest."
In the light of that, it's an interesting fact that practically all Danish farm produce is sold through farmer-owned agricultural marketing cooperatives. Individual selling by lone, unorganized farmers is virtually unknown.
American agriculture is gradually coming toward this state, with the memberships and the volume of business done by the selling co-ops steadily growing. The result: a sounder farm economy, more stable markets and a better return to the producer.
THE MONEY STAYS HOME
The criticism is made of chain stores that their profits are taken out of the local communities in which they operate, and sent to headquarters in some large city. The deduction is then made that the chains deplete the resources of the community, leaving little or nothing in return.
The criticism has an appealing sound to the uninformed—but it doesn't stand up on analysis. In the first place, the profits of the average chain store amount to but one or two per cent on the volume of business done, which could be sent out of the community. The remaining 98 per cent goes for taxes, rents, payrolls, advertising, insurance, and the purchase of merchandise. The great bulk of the chains' receipts are returned to the community—to its citizens, government, farmers, producers and local enterprise.

In the second place, the distribution of the small profits earned by the chain stores is little different from that of those earned by other merchandisers. A prosperous independent merchant may buy stocks and bonds with his surplus, or real property, or help finance someone's business venture a thousand miles away. In the modern world, there can be no completely self-contained community. We cannot erect a "tariff" about a town to prevent imports or exports of money or anything else. All industry and all business is interdependent—and an activity taking place the other side of the continent may be felt in a thousand towns, large and small. Money goes out of a town to serve the needs of another—and money comes in from still a third town. So goes the economic cycle of America.

The chain stores have been a vital factor in reducing the cost spread between producer and consumer, in aiding the farmer, and in building up communities as trading centers.

If you hear I've gone on a ram-page from a brainstorm, be sure I'm out looking for those writers who so calmly assume that every person alive just naturally takes a vacation during the summer. And the damage will be largely premeditated.

Prisoner Escapes

Guard Killed By British Officer in Daring Escape from German Prison Camp

Hunted by all the police in Germany, he found refuge in the heart and home of this lovely little girl of the Berlin streets. . . Calmly, bravely she faced the police and lied for him—lied for an enemy of her country whom she had known but one short night. . . Not even the threats of certain death could break her devoted loyalty to him.

You'll be held breathless by this exciting story of escape from a German prison camp. You'll be thrilled and fascinated by this romantic girl who took such desperate chances to hold the only tender, sincere love she ever knew. . . No wonder the late O. O. McIntyre called it "The most absorbing book I've read in five years."

Because we want you to know Mercury Books, we'll send you this one—"Everything Is Thunder", by J. L. Hardy—practically free. We'll supply the book, if you'll pay 10c for postage and handling.

Out of more than 100,000 copies printed we have less than 5,000 left—and they're going fast. Hurry and send a dime for a complete copy of this intensely interesting book of more than 90,000 words. (Sorry—only one to a customer).

Here's my dime. Send me a copy of the Mercury Book "Everything Is Thunder" by J. L. Hardy.
