Buyers Blamed For Low Prices

Present low prices for tobacco are being blamed on the buyers. One company buyer is said to have stated that with no certainty of crop control next year there may be such a large quantity of tobacco grown that the price may be lower than for years; and companies caught with large surpluses on hand will stand heavy losses. Committees have met in many sections to consider ways and means of remedying the situation. Sentiments for and against crop control for 1939 varies and it is too soon to predict what the outcome may

The revenue from our paper is so small we are forced to do a considerable amount of job work to keep the Record going. Our force is too small to allow unlimited time for assembling personal notes. That job is particularly mine, and I ask over and over for help from those who visit, have visitors, or entertain. There are a few who give unfailing assistance; but many think it seems too desirous of publicity to speak for themselves in giving items. The bad part is that some of these timid ones are those who feel hurt if their names are omitted when mention is made of happenings with which they were connected. Which is wholly natural.

We are always delighted to publish social and personal news of interest and if everyone could know the time and effort required to make up the columns of personals, co-operation would be easier to secure. For instance: Last week I called several places trying to learn one name, failed, did not
