UNANSWERED

You who have left us and gone on before,
What of the path that you trod
After our eyes could behold you
no more,
As you went up to meet God?

You who have earned for yourself
the repose
Only the ransomed attain,
What of the changes that no mortal knows?
What of the freedom from pain?

You who have met with your loved ones up there,—
Those whom on earth we still miss—
What of reunion so happy, somewhere?
What of the rapture and bliss?

You cannot speak unto ears that are filled With earth's harsh clamor and strife;
Yet, through our faith are our hearts strangely thrilled;
Death is but part of your life.

SUBWAY WRECK

When one subway train in New York City ran into a train that was just ahead in the tunnel two were killed and 49 injured. The first train was delayed for a few seconds because a passenger got caught in a door. The second train disregarded the rule that no train must enter the tunnel while another was in it. The shock of the collision was said by those above ground to have felt like an earthquake. This wreck was the first of its kind for ten years.
