THIS, THAT, & THE OTHER

MRS. THEO. B. DAVIS

A young woman, who knows far more about clothes than I ever shall, told me that to look well-dressed I should buy myself a nice dress early in the spring and another for fall. Then she said I should have two new cotton dresses, one for July, one for August. She added that cotton dresses can be washed at home and that few of us who wear the sort that must be dry-cleaned send them to the cleaner often enough during the hot weather.

The nice dresses for spring and fall are somewhat problematical, but most of us can get the cottons. And from my own experience I'd suggest that for us past our youth the best choice is something not too transparent, since transparency means added care for what goes beneath; and if we choose cloth that does not have to be starched we make another score against the ironing board. A dark ground with a light print looks fresh twice as long as would a light ground with dark print, even though the light and dark may be almost equal in each case. Voiles, flaxons, and organdies are far less serviceable than the new muslins, except the pique voile. And solid colors show soil long before prints do.

For years my husband refused to buy white shoes, though black ones speedily put mourning bands around all the white or light colored trousers worn with them. Last summer the boys persuaded him to get a pair of white oxfords. Knowing his habit of putting on his shoes before polishing them, I took on myself the job of looking after those whites. Every time he wore them I went over them with a cleaning cloth, and set them away in his closet. Vainly I waited for a word of appreciation. Instead he remarked one day that he didn't see that white shoes were any extra trouble; that he had worn his nearly all summer and they were not even soiled yet. He hadn't known I'd been cleaning them and thought the credit was his. It pays to stand around and be seen doing your good deeds.

Last Saturday's mail brought me a package that aroused my curiosity to fever heat before I opened it, since I had no reason whatever for expecting anything from any one at or near Dunn.

Inside that box was the loveliest crocheted handbag I ever saw, made of that new thread they call gimp, so white it made one feel cool to look at it, and with a carved top and chain looking like ivory. It was sent by Miss Gladys Strickland, faculty sponsor of CREEK PEBBLES, the Campbell College paper which for some time has been printed in our shop. Miss Strickland gave it "in appreciation of work cheerfully done" on the paper, and added that her mother made it. You can imagine how I felt! Aside from needing a new bag, I am so proud of that one I was tempted to hold it up and show it to our choir as they stood to sing in church Sunday.

Now Miss Strickland has gone

It is most encouraging to find so many people deeply interested in the Church of God. A large number attend church regularly. Many others would attend every service if it were so that they could. Then there are the shut-ins, the feeble and the sick. We pray that God's blessings may rest upon you.

far beyond the discharge of any obligation she unnecessarily felt; I am delighted beyond words and feel committed to doing my best for PEBBLES so long as we both shall live; the only question is, what does Mrs. Strickland get out of it?

The Poet and Peasant

By DOCK

"Came to town after the rain Monday", said the Peasant when he met the Poet in front of the post-office yesterday, "and walked around the various streets here and after about twenty-five minutes I was as wet as I would have been had I been out in the rain. I don't know who is responsible for the cutting of these weeds but it seems to me that someone should cut them. If one of us farmers were to let our ditch banks grow like that we would be called the laziest farmer in our community."

"The same condition existed last year until the later part of the season when the weeds grew up and became extremely large. They were hen cut by the town," said the Poet.

"Yes", said the Peasant, "I do recollect now that one day I was in town last year and saw some men cutting these weeds, but I also recollect that if they had been left alone for a few more weeks they would have fallen of their own accord and saved the town this money, but had the town put someone out to cut them at least twice before, the weeds would never have seeded and been much easier to cut besides looking much better."

"You certainly are right," said the Poet, "just like you are right about this idea of merchants keeping their merchandise in the store where it belongs until sold. Just look up the main street, it looks like the slums of some city where most all of the business is carried on in the streets. Wonder if the merchants feel that it will help business any?"

"I ain't so sure what the merchants think," said the Peasant, "but I know what I think. If I needed anything, whether it be groceries or what it might be, I wouldn't have anything that has been sitting out on the sidewalk for folks to stumble over and bend up or mess up. I ain't ever left my plow in the field yet and I ain't going to either, because it won't last as long out there and the same thing holds for a new piece of merchandise whatever it be."

"Well," said the Poet, "I hope that when you come to town next week you will find our streets looking more like people live here and that merchants who have not discontinued littering the sidewalks with their merchandise will have done so because it is the farmers business that we are looking for. We like and need you farmers in the scheme of things here in our town. And by-the-way, don't forget every place of business closes up on Wednesday at 1 o'clock and if you need anything come and get it before then."

Church Supper

On Tuesday of next week, June 27, ladies of the Methodist church will serve supper in the Woman's Club from 6 o'clock till 8 in the evening.

The menu comprises boiled ham, potato salad, tomatoes and lettuce, pickled beets, rolls, tea, and pie. The price is 35c a plate and the public is invited.

During the dinner hour music will be furnished under the direction of Miss Jocelyn House and a junior choir, directed by Mrs. H. C. Wade, will sing.

Doings Of The Rotary Club

Edison Mann had the program for the club Friday night. O. M. Marshburn, owner and manager of the Home Fertilizer plant of Zebulon, was the speaker. He spoke on Fertilizer, giving us information that was new in regard to commercial foods. He said that North Carolina uses each year approximately 1,250,000 tons of fertilizer at an average cost of $25 per ton. He said if farmers could be better informed as to the kind of fertilizer their farms need instead of guess work, there would be a saving of about five or six dollars per ton. He stated that the fertilizer companies are trying to remedy this waste. In order to remedy this, all companies are spending 5c a ton on all fertilizer they sell for the purpose of informing farmers the kind of fertilizer their farms need. The chemists tell us that the soil is never the same again after commercial fertilizer is used. They also state that some of the ferti-

Junior Chamber Of Commerce Meeting

The newly organized Junior Chamber of Commerce of Zebulon will meet in the Woman's Club on Tuesday night, June 27, at 8:45. It is earnestly hoped that all young business men who are interested in the growth and progress of Zebulon will attend this meeting, which is to be the climax of a membership campaign.

Between now and the date set W. S. Cheeves and his committee are attempting to confer with all who are eligible to join. Should any not be contacted by a member of the committee, he is urged to voluntarily be present. All will be welcome. There is much to be done in the town and there are men enough for the task, if all will cooperate.

This new organization is starting off well. It is not a secret lodge nor a social fraternity, yet it has features that are both beneficial and enjoyable. It may mean much or little to the individual and the community, depending upon the support it receives. Prove your loyalty and value to your town by becoming a member of the Junior Chamber of Commerce. And as a beginning, attend next Tuesday night's meeting.

LIFE-SAVING COURSE

A Red Cross Life-Saving Course begins at Lake Myra next Sunday. Hours are from two till five. The lessons are free, the only requirement being that pupils must be able to swim at least fifty yards.

Both senior and junior courses will be given, and those who pass the tests will be awarded certificates at the close of the school. Sunday is the day chosen in order that boys and girls who must work weekdays may take advantage of the lessons.

Kenneth Herndon, instructor, wishes to see all who are interested at Lake Myra next Sunday afternoon. Those from Zebulon, Wendell, Knightdale and vicinities are urged to attend.

A. N. JONES

After an extended illness Andrew N. Jones died at his home in Zebulon on Wednesday morning at five o'clock. The funeral service was held Thursday afternoon at four o'clock in the Baptist church, of which the deceased was a member. Pastor G. J. Griffin was in charge, assisted by a former pastor, the Rev. R. H. Herring, and the Rev. Carl Ousley of Wendell. Burial was in the Pace cemetery at Wakefield.

Surviving is the wife, formerly Miss Annie Pace of Wakefield.

PRIZES AWARDED

As promised last year, the Zebulon Record has awarded prizes to the two correspondents who in the opinion of the judges best represented their communities in news reported and who were most regular in their contributions. While the work of all correspondents has been appreciated, it was decided that those from Pilot and Pleasant Hill were best. A check for ten dollars was sent to Cameron Stallings of Pilot and one for five dollars went to Mrs. T. Y. Puryear of Pleasant Hill. Announcement for next year will be made later.
