There is a lot of sick hogs in our community. Some think it is Cholera. A lot of folks are going to have their hogs vaccinated against it. Quite a few have already died.

FLAPDOODLE

This week should herald the most spontaneous and elaborate of celebrations. There are several reasons for this. First: It brings the Five County Fair. Second: It brings the lesser fair, the State Fair. And Third: It brings back the Swashbuckler.

One of the most interesting occupations one can have at the colossal and studendous Five County Fair is to gaze upon the people who have their pictures took. As they emerge from the inside of the picture—place the victims await the arrival of their photos with more anxiety than a proud papa awaiting his first-born.

After about five minutes of impatient expectating the photos, the pictures having had time to dry, make their appearance. Before they are taken in shaking fingers, and every one says "oh" and "ah" at the appearance of the victim.

"Goshamighty" sez the onlookers, "Ain't that the best?!" "Nah," replies the subject of the picture, "I never take a good one." But don't think he or she, as the case may be, isn't really tickled, flattered, and slightly giddy from the praise. In fact they are so giddy that they promptly give away their pictures. Ho hum—Some life.

The most fun that I have had this week has been going into the Fair grounds and staring (and I do mean staring) at the folks who live through the rides that the midway sports.

It's really lots of fun to watch them whip around on the whip, then stagger over to the Octopus, pay their fare and start out on their voyage.

Their complexions turn red, beet red, and go from there to a vivid green. Tongues hang out, and eyes cross and recross. It's wonderful.

When they exit from the ride the many friends and sympathizers congratulate them on the fact that they have lived through this brief episode and dare them to try it again.
