

EVERBEARING BERRIES GROWN IN MOUNTAINS

Everbearing strawberries are providing an excellent source of income to Western North Carolina farmers who find a market in the mountain tourist trade, reports H. R. Niswonger, Extension horticulturist of N. C. State College.

Mr. Hartley has three acres of one and two-year-old plants of the Mastodon and Gem varieties, Niswonger says. He expects to market a total of 5,000 quarts by fall from these plantings.

C. B. Baird, Avery County farm agent, reports that everbearing strawberries are sold to tourists and local mountain hotels at a price of 10 to 15 cents per quart in the summer, and 20 to 25 cents per quart in the fall.

Niswonger recommends that the everbearing berries be grown on new ground, which should be cleared in the fall and burnt over to kill out forest weeds and trash.

All blossoms and new runner plants are pulled off until the first of June, and the fruit for the late crop develops from August 1 to as late as the middle of October.

Lard

The outlook for lard appears to have some hopeful spots because of the large buying program planned by the Federal Surplus Corporation.
