WHO DRINKS LIQUOR?

A recent survey by the Keeley Institute, Greensboro, shows that the belief that newspaper men are among the largest consumers of drink is a myth. The quench their thirst with soda pop! Out of 7,291 cases of alcoholism treated between 1930 and 1940, only 65 were newspaper editors and reporters.

Professional men head the list. Architects, advertising men, brokers, bankers, managers, are included in this classification. Surprisingly enough, farmers, cattleman and agriculturists come second, leading skilled labor, clerical people and merchants. The records show that 17,000 physicians have been treated for alcoholism. There were only 505 bartenders.. We suppose drinking would have interfered with their business!

Barbers have taken more to drink since women began to get their hair cut. Inebriety has risen among barbers in the past 20 years. Gas station attendants drink almost twice as much as the old-time liveryman 40 years ago. Hotel men drink 25 per cent more than those of a half-century ago.

From this survey it appears that the drink evil is gradually growing under the present setup in the United States. This is also claimed by the temperance people of the country. A report through the press of North Carolina's ABC liquor sales within the last few months shows a big increase in the amount of sales. To paraphrase the words of another: In every way every day it is getting worse and worse. Unsuppressed evil grows with increasing momentum.

Song Festival

The State Annual Song Festival will be held in Benson Sunday, June 22, 1941, beginning at 9 o'clock a.m. and lasting through the day. Competition for loving cups is open to all choirs, quartets, trios, and duets who reside in the state.

Singers from all parts of the state are invited. The festival is held in an open grove, and an adequate amplifying system is used so that every person attending may hear the full program.

About 15,000 people usually attend this unique event. There are no admission charges and everyone is invited.

Little River Reflections

It is nice and cool down here on the river bank. As I sat here I saw a bright flashing of wings as a redbird flew by, and my thoughts turned to the beauty and sweetness of our feathered friends. There was a time when God in the richness of His Providence had endowed our country with a beautiful supply of bird and animal life. Where are they today? Ruthlessly slaughtered for the greed and pleasure of man, you say? Naturalists and other authorities report that it was a wonderful sight to see the air and earth filled with all the variety of life that formerly inhabited these parts. Have you ever listened to the feathered chorus early on a morning in May? No symphony played by man can equal it. The liquid notes of the mocking bird down in the orchard, the song of the oriole in the tree down by the river bank, and the call of the bob white on the creek bank are God's own chorus. As I hear these notes my thoughts go back to boyhood days; as resting on the pine needles on the hillside, I dreamed of greatness ahead; alas only dreams, but sweet! Neighbor, we must be conservationists for the sake of our feathered friends. This is the age of the husbandman in the history of rural life in our country, when we conserve our natural resources. Remember our bird and animal life. Listen, neighbor, hear that call? It is the oriole as it swings in its nest down the river. It is now joined by other feathered musicians in a Halleluiah Chorus to the Creator. We pause to listen. Amen.

"Don't get blue or give up until you have reliable news that God is dead or has forgotten to be gracious."

This, That And The Other

of its second lease on life. Such cases are nice to put under others, keeping the tick clean much longer. Especially are they useful in this day of hair-grooming by sons in the family, as one case may fail to absorb all the excess Sta-comb, or whatever is used.

I might mention many other of my economies, many so petty as to seem pettish of me, but the one that is worrying me most right now is seeing so many papers go to waste. Memories of the World War are simmering in my head and I recall how we rolled newspapers tight, dipped them in melted paraffin and were told that they were to be sawed into short lengths and used for candles in the trenches. Maybe they were. But I do know that we may ourselves use our newspapers to good advantage. Put them, folded into water until wet, roll them up and squeeze out all the water you can. Place the wet rolls in the sun to dry, then tore like stovewood. They will burn slowly, much more like wood than paper, and help greatly toward relieving a shortage of kindling. I have not yet found time to wet and dry the accumulation since cold weather, and it keeps reminding me of the sin and hame of wastefulness.
