Hitch-Hiking

LOOKING BOTH WAYS

Defense officials are "figuring" how to save as much raw materials from the manufacturing industry as possible to help defense production. One auto manufacturer has compiled estimates to show that if the automobile manufacturers will confine their output to the lighter models, 227,000 tons of material will be saved this year.

On the other hand one must remember that most of the material that goes into defense products goes for good. Its ultimate end will be the bottom of the sea or scattered more widely by bombing planes and made more difficult to get together again than if it lay deep in the earth. So the people who have cars, refrigerators, radios, farm equipment and other needful things, had better make them last a long time. The next ones will be expensive and money to purchase them will be hard to get.

WHY FRANCE FELL

Andrew Maurois, noted French essayist, says: "Had the leaders of France been frank with the people . . . my beloved country would never have fallen." So, many people of our beloved United States also feel that if our leaders had been frank with them there would not today be the indifference and opposition to the government's plans as now exists. Not only do many believe the government has failed to let the people know all the facts but it has in some instances magnified others beyond the truth. Truthfulness, sincerity and honesty are things absolutely necessary to keep confidence and patriotism at their vital stage for efficient cooperation.

BUSINESS HITTING THE SKY!

A prominent member of the President's cabinet says industry should have an arbitrary limit of profit, that a certain per cent is enough and that the government should "fix" it. Yet the same statesman says that no such ruling or regulation should muzzle labor or fix labor wages. If I, in my little business, have a limit of 20 per cent profit on my gross business levied, and my employees may demand and get wages that "eats up" my net profit of 12 per cent, after I have "contributed" the balance to the up-keep of Uncle Sam, where will my business along with poor little me land? Sounds like the old, old problem of the cat in the well.

INSTALLMENT PURCHASING

Sometime ago we found it necessary to buy a new font of linotype mats—the things we use in casting the letters that make up a newspaper. It required nearly $200.00 to finance the bill. And, we hardly had $2.00, much less $200.00. So we bought and began paying for them so much down and $30.00 a month till paid for. I notice that I am in a big company which includes every community in the nation. We installment folks owe manufacturers and retailers $9,800,000,000 to be paid so much per week or month. Even our government is urging its citizens to buy homes on the installment plan. Many people can buy necessities in this way when, if it were a cash proposition, they could not. In seeking new sources for tax the government may levy some kind of tax on this great American way of doing business. If it does "crack down" on us in its multiplied way of raising taxes we will not just be in a fix, we'll be fixed.

YES, FOLKS ARE FUNNY, TOO

Which of us cannot stand for hours and watch a cage of monkeys play human? Montaigne said, "It may be the cat is just as amused by me as I am by her." Was it imagination or did I see a cat wink or a dog grin at me when it had done something an animal is not supposed to do, or was it when I did something a human is not supposed to do? I believe a lot of animals have about as much sense as some of us and others have a much greater sense of humor than most of us. And I have seen a lot of animals of various kinds that seemed to me to be better fitted by disposition and conduct to add to the happiness of the saints in glory than a lot of folks I know—even folks who "belong" to the church.

THE ART OF BEING BOSSSED

The secret of being loved is to love, some one has said—and to know your trade better than anyone else. And, the writer goes on to say, men bear commanding. They even want to be, provided they are well commanded. Now that loving part is nothing new, but the other—being bossed, is something most men will not admit, even to their wives. And that thing of "knowing your trade better than any one" else—does that refer to the man or his boss?

in the Carolinas, electric power is playing an important part in the nation's Preparedness efforts.

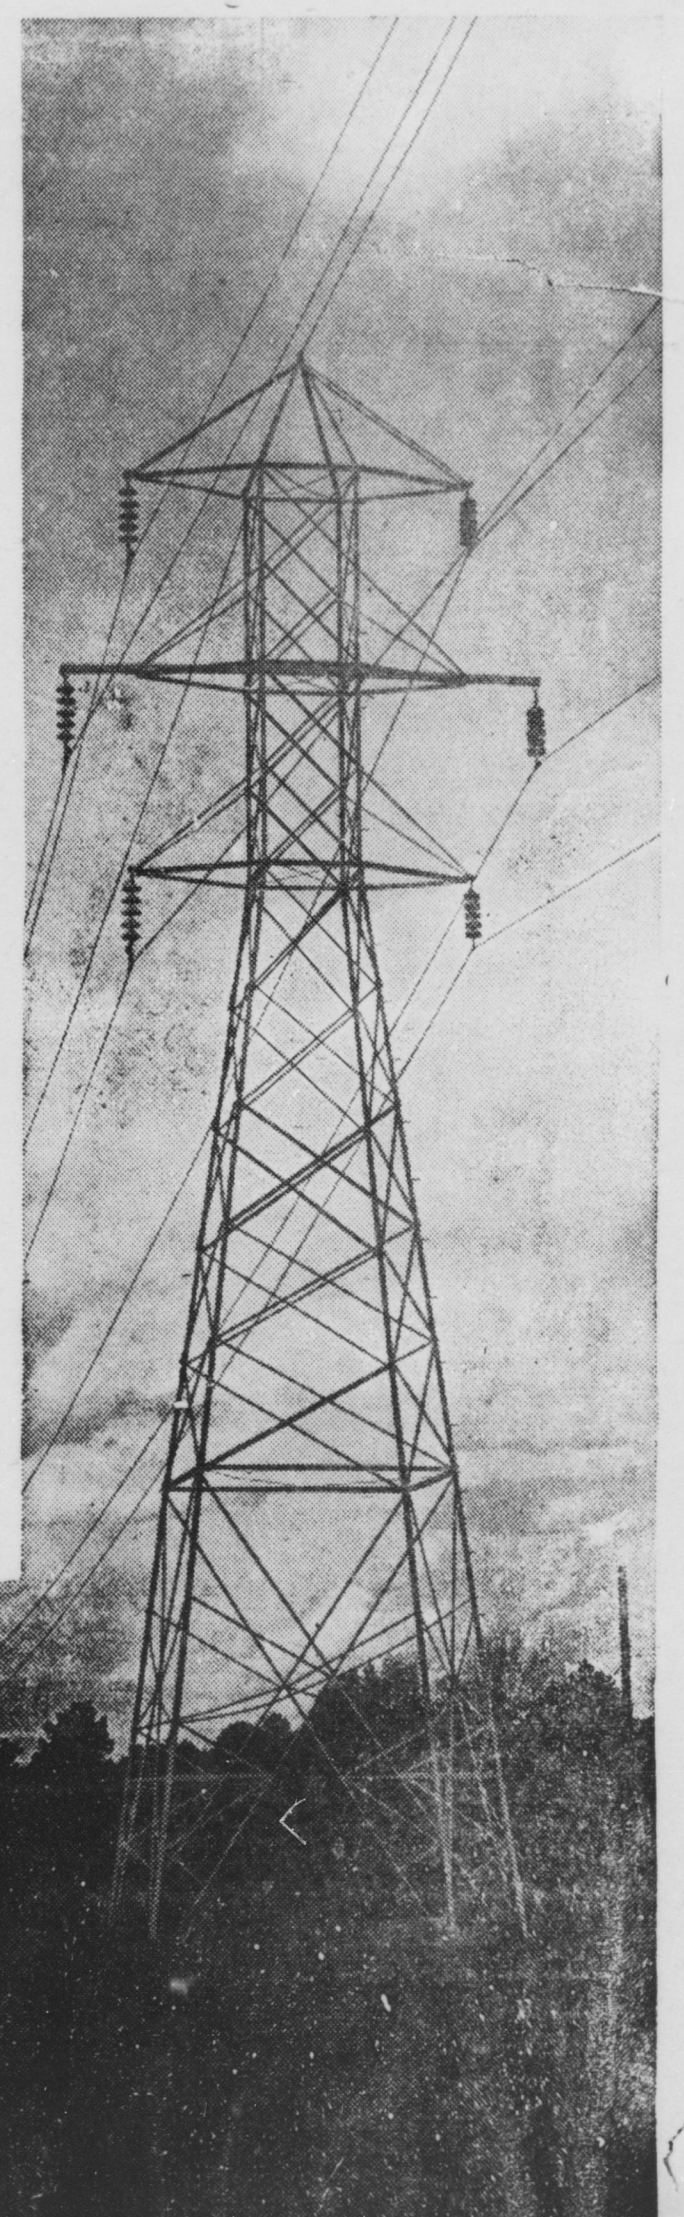

Factories in the territory served by the Carolina Power & Light Company are working night and day, many on indispensable National Defense materials, and, with the aid of electric power, are contributing much to the nation's needs during this period of emergency.

Because of the fact that the Carolina Power & Light Company has always planned far in advance of actual demands, the greatly increased requirements for electric power within its territory have been met . . . and electric power has actually been sent on its way to work in defense industries located outside its territory.

Another large electric generating plant is now under construction and new transmission lines are being built to carry to work more power to our customers and Uncle Sam.
