

Banker Brown Brings Big News About Liberty Bonds Stored Away in Attics

Banker Vance Brown brought a New York Times article into the Record office the other day which stated that of the $21,326,770,000 owed for Liberty Bonds from World War I about twenty-one million dollars is still outstanding.

From a bit of slide-rule work, assuming that this amount is fairly equally distributed over the United States, we find that readers of The Zebulon Record have in their possession about $875 worth of these bonds.

These bonds now draw no interest, but may be cashed for their initial value plus interest up till the date of their maturity. Owners may receive money or War Bonds for their old bonds and interest.

Look around among your old papers, and see if you have part of this $875.00. Fred Clark, for instance, just the other day found some old Liberty Savings Stamps, worth just as much as ever. If you find some and buy new bonds, you'll help yourself and the government.
