gallon in Niagara Falls. Crossing the river and entering Canada, I paid forty-three in Tornoto. Later on I paid forty-eight as I reached Renfrew.

In three weeks of driving and camping in Canada, I never saw another North Carolina license plate.

Universal Military Training has been in the air for several years now. Numerically, organizations opposed to such a procedure are in the majority. However they are less blatant than smaller groups in favor of the scheme.

The biggest stumbling block to having compulsory training enacted into law is the constant stream of approval issued by the armed forces.

Common folk believe that those in authority in the armed forces are thinking only of their security as to salary and position.

The less the army cries for it, the more the people might decide it worthwhile.
