"MAGIC" WEAVING MACHINE

Multi-colored fabrics, so scarce during the war years are still meeting a strong demand. Much of this cloth is manufactured on box looms. It requires a high degree of craftsmanship to set up these looms and careful weaving is a must. The intricate machine shown above can use four different colors in making cloth, and a pronounced plaid was being made when this picture was taken. Multiple colors are woven in the cloth with the filling or welt yarns which run crosswise, and the looms's shuttles change automatically to pick up the proper yarns necessary for the design.

Local Farmers Advised Of Conservation Agenda

G. L. Winchester and J. B. Baucom
Soil Conservation Service

Mr. Phillip Whitley had loblolly and long leaf pine seedlings planted on his farm in 1941. These pines were planted on badly eroded, rocky, or other places not suited to cultivation. These pines have made good growth. Mr. Whitley states that "almost 100 per cent of the trees lived and that the only trouble he is having is to keep tourists from breaking out the beautiful tops of the long leaf pines." Mr. Whitley contemplates planting additional pine seedlings on another farm this winter.

"What Are You Doing About Soil Erosion" and "Are You Using Your Land Properly" tell their story to you in pictures as you enter Professor E. D. Ellington's classroom at Zebulon. These and other charts on "Soil Conservation" displayed high on the classroom walls continually tell the needs of saving our soils. These charts are only one of the means used in teaching the importance and value of our soils. You will find lesson plans on all phases of water and soil conservation used in teaching both his all-day and veteran farmer training classes. Mr. Ellington, as well as other teachers of vocational agriculture, is taking advantage of all the devices possible to teach the fundamentals of "Soil Conservation."

MRS. THEO. B. DAVIS:

This, That & the Other

Mr. W. H. Moss brought us some turnips last week. Some were large eating size, and two were enormous, one weighing more than six pounds, the other a little less. We don't grow them that way — but wish we did.

When the two-year-old granddaughter was with me one day I wanted to teach her to string spools. The big darning needle was long enough and strong enough, but I was afraid she'd hurt herself with it. I wrapped a strip of Scotch tape around the pointed end of the needle, pressing it tightly together, and it was still in place after all the spools were strung and admired.

You probably know that when a child begins using a needle the thread should always be doubled and tied in a firm knot at the end; and the needle should be large, if not blunt.

Today I saw almost the ultimate in bathing suit wearing; in a picture a young girl wore one while trimming a Christmas tree. Now I want to see just one more of that type. I want a picture of a beautiful lady in a bathing suit frying chicken livers. And I want the
