If there are too few electrical outlets in your home—you DO have a problem in getting the most efficient use from your appliances and the most enjoyment from electrical living. Of course you can use double sockets and ugly extension cords—but that is at best only a stop gap remedy. It is best to have an electrician install additional outlets in the places you need them. He can do it without "mussing up" the house and at reasonable cost — and you will banish your plug-in problem once and for all.
