Close Analysis of Returns Still Shows Old Davis Lost

Things have quieted down for me on the political front since May 27, but over at the National Guard there is ever-increasing activity as we prepare for camp in July. The only hold-over from the First Primary has been lots of well-wishes from my friends and lots of advice from other sources.

One veteran politician asked me if I had looked over the returns from each individual precinct. "I looked at the totals," I told him.

"Well, study the precincts," he said, pointing his finger at the returns in the N&O. "Evaluate them. Appraise them. Assess them. Scrutinize every angle."

I pondered, meditated, reflected, and speculated.

"Now what do you see?" questioned the politician.

"The same thing as always," I replied. "I didn't get enough votes to be elected!"

Oh, Those Orders!

One gay young swain about town told one of the members of the National Guard unit that he would join the battery except for the fact that he was getting married this fall.

"You'd better get in the Guard," said the Guardsman, "because it's such good training for marriage."

"What d'yuh mean?" queried the swain.

"You learn how to take orders!" was the reply.

Uncle Allen's Daughter

My uncle (by marriage) Allen Cawthorne has a pretty daughter who is in the third grade at Wake-lon. The other day she came home and asked her mother if Barrie Davis was a communist. "No," her mother said emphatically, "Why do you ask?" "Well," said lovely little Loretta, "I read on a card where it said 'Barrie Davis for Communist!'"

Watch Your Language

Over at the armory the other night one of the Guardsmen was telling about the farmer who stumbled over a stump in the field one afternoon. "I wish that stump was in h—!" the farmer exclaimed. "Oh, I wouldn't do that," replied our friend, the Guardsman. "You might stumble over it again sometime."

The last two drills this month for the National Guard battery will be concerned with combined sections training which means that the whole battery will leave the armory and set up as if in actual field training. The last time we tried that one gentleman saw the howitzer being set in position near the fair grounds, heard the executive officer give the commands for deflection and elevation, and then decided to head for far and distant places before that big gun blew the whole dog-goned town off the map. Needless to say, the "fire" command resulted only in a click as the firing pin went forward, but the scared spectator was no longer around to hear it.

Local Rotary Club Hears Fine Talks At Recent Meets

Rodney McNabb addressed local Rotarians at their meeting last Friday night on the Rotary Foundation, which provides scholarships and fellowships for college students in this country and abroad. The Foundation is a memorial to Paul Harris, founder of Rotary, and enables some 150 students to study each year in countries other than their native lands.

The local club participated in endowment of these fellowships several years ago, when each member gave ten dollars or more to the Foundation fund. Object of the fellowships is to promote international understanding.

At the preceding meeting of the local Rotary club, C. V. Whitley reported on doings at the annual district conference at Pinehurst, where H. B. Spruill of Windsor was named district governor. Emphasis at the conference was on provision of opportunities, recreational and cultural, for the youth of America and the world.

Two weeks ago Ashley Murphy explained refrigeration cycles to the club, using an illustration drawn by his eldest son. He discussed commercial and home refrigerators, and told of construction of commercial chill rooms.

Recreation Leader Signed for 1950 By Local Group

Lee Rhodes, rising senior at Wake Forest College and native of Lenoir, will be the first director of the community recreation program in Zebulon, Chairman Carlton Mitchell of the Community Recreation Council announced yesterday. Herbert Appenzeller, coach at Wakelon School, will assist the new director on a part-time basis.

The Wake Forest student is majoring in physical education and recreation, and was highly recommended to the local Recreation Council by Prof. James W. Long. He gained his experience at Lenoir in industrial and community recreation work.

The Community Recreation Council is in the midst of a drive to raise funds to finance the summer program, which will be designed to include every age group.

Willie B. Hopkins and Ralph Bunn are heading the drive for funds, Chairman Mitchell said. He urged that contributors be generous so that the initial effort will be successful.

The program will be carried out on the school grounds and will include organized activities and games for children, badminton, volleyball, and horseshoe pitching for all ages. An occasional evening of folk dancing is planned.
