

Hostess at Reception

Mrs. M. E. Horton was hostess at a reception Thursday evening at her home, honoring Miss Susan Burnett of Bluefield, West Virginia, whose wedding to Charles A. Horton takes place September 1, 1951.

Mrs. L. M. Massey greeted the guests at the door and Miss Carolyn Massey introduced to the receiving line composed of the hostess, Mrs. Ed Ellington, Miss Burnett, Mrs. Betty Johnson Bass, Mrs. Fred Corbett, Mrs. Charles Cimerro, and Mrs. Francis Wall.

Miss Nancy Whitley received at the dining room door.

Mrs. Carlton Mitchell presided over the punch bowl. Serving mints, nuts, and bridal cakes were Mesdames R. H. Herring, Frank Kemp, and Misses Ruby Dawson and Ann Strickland. The dining table was covered with a net cloth, the corners of which were caught up with dainty white bows. A miniature bride flanked by crystal candelabra with white burning tapers were used on the table.

All white flowers were used throughout the home.

Goodbyes were said to Mrs. Sam Horton and Mrs. George Griffin.

About 100 guests called during the evening.

COTTON

To Keep 'Em Firing

You're waist gunner on a B-29. You're over enemy territory. You're tense . . . eyes strained, muscles tight and cramped . . . waiting, waiting.

Then you hear it—"Enemy planes coming in at 3 o'clock." You feel better now, muscles relax . . . you caress your 50-caliber. A fighter dives close . . . your gunsights track his path. NOW! A heavy blast of slugs tears toward him. He's hit, on fire . . . going into a spin, down, down, down.

You're sweating, exhilarated . . . you get credit for another . . . you and cotton.

Yes, you and cotton, for cotton lintners are the basic indispensable ingredient for the smokeless powder which sent your steel jacketed ammo on its way.
