

SCOTT SUMMERS: YOUR CAPITAL REPORTER

ier is to take no action affecting either Forestry Division personnel or policy without written permission from Ross.

Come October 15, the Board of Conservation will stage its Fall meeting at Winston-Salem. Between now and then, you can rest assured, the boys will be getting their knives well sharpened.

Caught Short?

Reopening of Alcoa's Badin aluminum plant seem likely to make Carolina Power and Light Company's President, Louis Sutton, eat his "abundance of power" words.

A great to-do was made over the opening of the Goldsboro steam generating power plant. Actually, it meant that — for the first time — CP&L was in a position to generate enough power of its own to meet needs within its area. Prior to the Goldsboro opening, it had to buy power to meet demands. And, if its purchasing sources had been cut off, there would have been a real shortage of power in CP&L territory.

Now with reopening of the Badin Alcoa plant, CP&L is scrambling to find power to take care of the present demand.

In fact, according to Drew Pearson, Washington is worried lest areas of North Carolina — including Raleigh — are forced to stage "brownouts" because of a power shortage.

Tidewater Again

That rate raise that Tidewater Power Company got just to sell stock, according to the Utilities Commission's own report, may be snatched away.

As a result of making too much money, according to Commission audits, the company has been ordered to show cause why the rates shouldn't be cut.

One wag around Capitol Hill reported the other day that "Tidewater pays the highest dividends on its stocks, pays the highest salaries to top brass, has the highest rate, and gives the lousiest service of any power company in the State of North Carolina."

Paroles Talk

For the past 14 years, your Capital Reporter has been hearing whispered reports of "paroles for sale." For just as many years I — and other reporters — have tried to track them down. It always has come out the same way. Some lawyer was paid a fee to try to get a prisoner a parole.

Prisoners seem to think that they can buy anything. For years there has been the constant theme around Central Prison, that "if you get the right lawyer" you could get out.

Because paroles are given those men who hired attorneys sometimes, this adds to the prisoners' belief. Actually, the men paroled would have gotten out without an attorney, but they can't seem to understand that.

Anyway, it seems that those folks who pay big fees to attorneys in an effort to get a parole for some prisoner are wasting their money. They'd do better to have some member of the family intervene in their behalf.

The Big Hunt

Via the grapevine comes word that Capus Waynick is spending a great deal of his vacation time looking for a candidate for governor. Since he isn't running, it appears that he wants to have something to do with naming the guy. At first, he reported to be favoring Brandon Hodges — who, by some wild stretch of his imagination, Capus reportedly considered a liberal. The latest report is that Capus has shifted to Hubert Olive.
