Tractor Farming Changes Methods Of Ag Teaching

Changing from mule-type farming to tractor farming requires different teaching for Zebulon High School and G. W. Miller, Jr., County Agent in Wake County. They stated that in 1945 there were 454 farm tractors in Wake County and that in 1954 there were 2,658 according to the United States Federal Census. This means that the tractors have multiplied over six times and farm trucks have increased from 856 to 1,812 in the last 10 years.

Mr. Ellington says that he will hold a Tractor Maintenance School at 3:00 p.m. on Tuesday, January 24, at his vocational agriculture shop. He stated that Mr. J. C. Ferguson and John W. Glover, Agriculture Engineering Extension Specialist from N. C. State College will be with them to put on the school. The school will cover operator care and daily maintenance of the farm tractor, dealing chiefly with the following topics:

1. General principles of the internal combustion engine.
2. Tractor fuels and carburetor adjustment.
3. Air cleaners and importance of service.
4. Lubricants and lubrication.
5. Oil filters, their importance and function.
6. Cooling systems, care and cleaning.
7. Ignition systems, spark plugs and correct engine timing.
8. Ignition systems, spark plugs and correct engine timing.
8. Tire care, wheel weighting, and hitching.
9. Tractor Safety.
10. Operation and storage.

They will have sectioned air cleaners, oil filters, ignition assemblies, engine charts, etc., for classroom discussion. Two or three farmer-owned tractors of different makes will be used in demonstrating engine tune-up and emphasizing the importance of good maintenance.

BASKETBALL

By Leary Davis

The Wakelon boys rolled to their third victory of basketball in their past four games by defeating Wake Forest 57-41. Wakelon enjoyed a scant 5 point lead at half-time, but increased it to 9 in less than a minute of the second half when Robert Jenkins laid up a basket on a clean-breaking tip-off play which was controlled by Carlton Debnam. Tony Wilson clicked on a jump shot a few seconds later.

Wakelon held Wake Forest to 6 points in the third quarter while scoring 17. This gave Wakelon a 16 point lead, which they never lost.

Wakelon played for good shots in the fourth quarter, and a bit of fancy ball handling by Joseph Temple and Tony Pearce never gave Wake Forest a chance to catch up.

Wakelon outscored Wake Forest in all four quarters with the exception of the fourth, in which both teams scored 10 points. High scorers for Wakelon were Carlton Debnam and Robert Jenkins with 20 and 17 points respectively.

Martin K. Green

Announces For Senate

Martin K. Green, candidate for the North Carolina State Senate in the coming Democratic primary, says that this action is prompted by a genuine desire to render completely fair and conscious service to the people of North Carolina.

He says that one of the issues in his campaign will be the great social question of our time, that of the segregation issue.

"Our Governor has stood virtually alone in his attempts to assure that North Carolina's position shall be taken on the sound basis of reason and understanding. The Governor cannot do this job alone."

He says that relative to the public school problem, he is unalterably opposed to forced integration. He says that it will be his purpose to discuss this problem forthrightly and honestly, to the end that both races may walk the next 60 years in harmony and with hatred, so that we may end this period with a much higher per capita income, and with better schools.
