NEW LIONS PRESIDENT

Man of Many Talents

Had not World War II come along, Hardin Hinton might today be playing baseball with one of the nation's big league baseball clubs or he might be one of the state's outstanding young agriculture teachers or county agents.

Hinton, who is president-elect of Zebulon Lions Club for the 1957-58 year, was one of Wakelon High School's most outstanding athletes. His pitching of fast and knuckle balls kept the team in the top bracket of high school teams in the county.

"I really didn't have anything special," Hinton said modestly.

But old timers who remember him and his professional-quality stance on the mound say he did have something. Something that could have quickly taken him to the big leagues with the right breaks.

All his life he has loved sports, but baseball most of all. He began playing the game when he was just a little tyke, in the yard of his home, the cow pasture, at school.

His childhood friends say that whenever they gathered together, Hardin managed to talk them into playing baseball.

He was born October 4, 1921, in Johnston County near Emit. His parents, who still reside in that community, are Mr. and Mrs. Arthur D. Hinton.

Hardin is one of the younger children of a family of fifteen. It was an affectionate family, full of love, harmony and good times.

This affectionate quality he learned from such a happy family comes out in associations with his own family. He enjoys romping with his four-year-old son and seven-year-old daughter. He and his children often fish together in the pond on his farm, put together puzzles, read the comics and watch television.

ECC Official Predicts 'Exciting, Terrible' Future for Students, Teachers

The vice president of East Carolina College predicts "an exciting and terrible" future for teachers and students.

Dr. Leo Jenkins made the prediction when he spoke before a pitifully small audience at Wakelon School Appreciation Supper last Thursday night.

He characterized the future thusly: 1) there will be different forms of energy; 2) there will be a society based on electronic control; 3) greater distribution of the comforts of life; 4) relationships with neighbors will change; 5) relationship with God will change; 6) and degenerative diseases will be conquered providing longer life.

"In 12 or 13 years," Dr. Jenkins said, "we are going to see a new world."

This world began during the World War II, he said, and will materialize fully in the not too distant future.

He prophesied that America is going to live through a second industrial revolution.

The implications of the future of education were brought out by Dr. Jenkins. He said he foresees a much longer school year in the future. Society, he said, is going to demand it.

He predicted that a 10 or 11 months school system will be necessary. The world is demanding that the student finish his elementary and high school education as soon as possible.

He said, too, that teacher pay in the future will be higher. Now, teachers are classified as technicians. Tomorrow they will be brought up to a professional state.

Closed circuit television for teaching purposes will become the means of educating the masses in the future, he predicted. In fact, it is already being practiced experimentally in some of the larger cities.

Dr. Jenkins emphasized the fact that science is going to become more and more important in our living. Schools will play an important part in the training and educating of pupils for a world that has become and will become more dependent on scientific knowledge.

"It is going to be a wonderful age and a baffling age," Dr. Jenkins concluded.

Parents and teachers must begin to realize this fact and prepare for it. The future is dependent on them.

Dr. Jenkins was introduced by Wakelon Principal John J. Hicks. Entertainment for the evening was provided by students from Mrs. Wade's dance class and the junior glee club under the direction of Miss Margaret Anne Stevenson.
