Professor Praises Pen Works of Carolina

Richard Walser, professor of English at North Carolina State College, told the Zebulon Senior Woman's Club at its November meeting Tuesday afternoon that our State should be proud of the literature that has come and is coming from the pens of its writers.

He cited that the State has produced a great many firsts in the realm of literature.

It has also produced a number of major novelists, the major one being the late Thomas Wolfe. Walser considers Wolfe to be "head and shoulders" over any writer North Carolina has produced.

Because of time limitation, he hurriedly mentioned the early writers in the State, the post-bellum writers, poets and the writers of today who are turning out literary works.

Walser, in conjunction with D. L. Corbett of the department of Archives, has recently compiled a pamphlet entitled Picturebook of Tar Heel Authors. This publication is primarily slanted for eighth graders.

The professor told the club that he has devoted a lifetime to the study of North Carolina authors.

Mrs. Horace Smith, who introduced the speaker, called him a writer. Walser thanked Mrs. Smith graciously, but corrected her and said he is "really not a writer but that he writes about writers."

He revealed that he is at present working on a novel about George Moses Horton, North Carolina's first Negro poet. He has recently completed gathering material and

Only $1,397.02 had been collected for the Fund drive which ended Friday, according to Robert Daniel Massey, treasurer of the drive.

President Thomas Monk revealed that he was very disappointed in the giving. He revealed, too, that the donors will not be published in this paper as in the past. This, he said, is not being done to avoid embarrassment.

More donations are to be turned in, according to drive chairmen. Mr. Massey said the complete donation list from the bus-(Continued on Page 8)

Norman Screws said: "File a complaint with Chief of Police Hopkins and the other officials. They have been instructed to cope with the situation. If they don't, it is negligence on their part."

Kermit Corbett voiced the opinion that "It is a bad situation and that something must be done about it, but I don't know what." He further added that, "We are troubled with dogs in this section of town and know how the other folks feel. The Board is still trying to find some workable solution."

Her mode of ambulation is now by crutches until the bone in her thighs are hardened enough to allow weight to be put on them.

In January 1956, Frances underwent successful heart surgery at Duke Hospital for the removal of an extra heart valve with which she had been born. She has suffered no arterial trouble since then.

Later in 1956, the trouble was noted with her leg and a cast was prescribed. It seems as if the cast worn by the youngster had some material in it which proved to be an allergy to the patient. This caused inflamation of the flesh tissues. It was then that traction was recommended.
