FARM BUREAU WOMEN HOLD MEETING

Water supplies and making them sanitary was discussed at the February meeting of the Farm Bureau Women held last Monday night at Wakelon School.

State and county health department representatives attended this meeting and contributed to the program. These included: Mrs. Fandiford, Wake County Health Superintendent; Robert Floyd and Ben Ellis, members of the Wake County Health Department; Mrs. Boutwell, N. C. Medical Society; and Mrs. Edwards, also a member of Wake County Health Department.

Discussion of the protection of private water supplies, especially applicable to the rural populace, was brought out by the speakers.

Less than a dozen members of this organization were present, possibly because of the inclement weather.

A number of pamphlets were left on water protection, rats, mosquitoes, fleas and sewage disposal. Any one desiring information on any of these subjects may obtain it from the local Farm Bureau or by contacting the state or county health departments in Raleigh.
