Sanford Speaks

taken teachers because of better pay. North Carolina is last (among the states) in increase in teachers' pay."

Reciting figures to support his stand, Governor Sanford said North Carolina spends $240 per year on each child's education. The national average is $369 per year per child.

"We provide less than two-thirds the support for our children than the national average," he exclaimed.

Parity means much to the farmer, he continued, and if prices paid farmers falls much below parity, everyone suffers. However, "The support of children's education falls to less than 66% of national education parity," he said.

Chiding those who claim North Carolina can not increase its support of education, the Governor said, "We can do what we need to do and what we must do."

An added motivation at the present time is fear, he said. "The Communists put a man into space," he said. "On the same page with the announcement of the Communist spaceman was a story that North Carolina was 48th among the states in illiteracy."

Catching up with the Communists requires an education in science, he said, yet "300 high schools in North Carolina do not teach physics."

"We can not say let others do it," he said. "The education of our children depends on us. We can not afford not to adopt this education program. We can not afford to wait any longer. The time has come when the people of North Carolina must move out with quality education."

"I am satisfied that with the support of people like you we will move to the forefront in providing educational opportunity for our children," the Governor concluded.

Enthusiastic applause was given the Governor at the close of his talk.

The Wendell octet provided spirited musical entertainment before the Governor's talk. The octet is composed of Donald Thomas, Curtis Todd, Marsh Knott, Richard Brantley, Judy Todd, Loraine Herndon, Mary Charlotte Roberts, and Peggy Brantley. The group was accompanied by Paul Montgomery at the piano.

Jimmy Buchanon, president of the Wendell Chamber, awarded special prizes to winners in the home improvement contest sponsored by the Chamber.

Mrs. R. E. Barham, Jr., was prize winner as chairman of the district entered in the competition. The Town of Wendell was divided into 25 districts for the contest.

The dinner always is a highlight of the year for the Wendell Chamber.
