ONLY SIX OTHER STATES... of the 50

There are only six other states in the 50 where families buy electric service for their homes at a lower average price than folks are paying in North Carolina.

This story is told by statistics in the 1960 reports of the Federal Power Commission . . . reports which also show that there are only two other states where commercial and industrial customers can buy electric service at a lower average price than in North Carolina.

These figures, of course, are average prices per KWH and they are for investor-owned companies . . . companies such as CP&L which is proud of its record of supplying all the electricity its customers need at prices well below the national average.
