Has Managed To Evade Building Station During the Past Eight Years

RALEIGH, N. C., Dec. 20 .- Asserting that the Southern Railway had sought through its use of "all the arts of legal technique to further delay and defeat its obligation to the public" in the building of the union station at Selma, N. C., the State Corporation Commission today issued an order to the company that if it failed after 10 days to join with the Atlantic Coast Line in constructing the building court action will be 191 en to enforce action and penalties as sessed.

Selma is one of the most important transfer points in the state, according to the Commission, which added that the Southern Railway "after taking advantage of eight years of the benefits of its pleas for indulgence falls short of the demands of good faith as well as of legal obligation." The penalty for failure to proceed with the construction of the unior the city and relief socities were all station is $500 each day, it was stated.
