THE WHISKEY PROCESSION—WHERE ARE YOU IN IT?

Here the representatives of the great American Whiskey trade parade before you. The distiller who makes the whiskey, the jobber who sells it at wholesale, the retailer who sells it over the bar and watches the small glass of water that follows the whiskey and the sugar that follows both, are here. The CONSUMER, too, is in this picture. Where are you?

This cartoon needs no editorial, it needs not a line written with it. But we write to urge our millions of readers who are fortunately free from any personal interest in this procession to think about this picture, to place it before the eyes of those who have taken up their position in the rear ranks of this whiskey regiment. If you point this out to a young man who has begun to drink whiskey, or to an old man who is letting whiskey get hold of him, tell that man old William R. Travers' favorite story about the yachts at Newport. Sailing into the harbor at Newport he saw many beautiful yachts at anchor on the sunny water. "Whose boat is that?" "It belongs to So-and-So, the great Wall Street broker." "Whose yacht is that big one over there?" "It belongs to So-and-So, another great Wall Street broker." "And whose is that big steam yacht, almost as large as an ocean liner?" "It belongs to the greatest of all the Wall Street brokers and bankers—So-and-So." Travers looked at the different yachts, asked about them, and got always the same answer. At last, with his usual stammer, he asked: "Where are the customers' yachts?" "There were no customers' yachts to be seen." The man who manufactures whiskey has his automobile, his various big financial interests, his yacht and his fine house. The wholesaler whiskey dealer has his fine carriage, and enjoys life. The prosperous retailer of whiskey drives his fast trotting horse, and enjoys the races. Where is the automobile of the confirmed whiskey consumer? Where is his fast trotting horse? Where are his carriages? He has none of these things. HE BUYS THEM FOR THE OTHERS. To the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer he contributes all his money, all his chances of success, his peace of mind, self-respect and the welfare of his family. If you must be in this procession of whiskey, if you are able to ride in this procession in the automobile, the carriage or the buggy, we have nothing to say. That is a matter for your conscience and inclination. But if your place in the whiskey procession is with the men on foot, in the great horde at the rear, we HAVE something to say. Get out of that procession. The longer you stay in it the farther you will drop toward the end. Sooner or later you will have to get out of it. It is better to get out by an effort of the will and an assertion of character than by the force of circumstances. Leave the procession of your own free will. Don't be driven out at the far end of it.—National Advocate.

Guaranteeing Deposits. If the United States government which can at any time inspect a bank and find out just what it is doing and how its business is being conducted, requires security for its deposits, why should not security be given to the depositor who cannot examine for himself and does not know anything about the bank's solvency or methods? Any loss to the national government to the State or the country, or to the city would be all the people, and thus be small upon each one, while the loss to the individual has to be borne entirely by himself and may wipe out his entire savings. Is not the argument stronger in favor of the protection of the nation, the state, the county, or the city? But the case is even stronger when the bank is required to put up specific security for the protection of national, state, county or city deposits. Its gilded securities are thus hypothecated and the inferior securities are left for the security of the depositors, so that as a matter of fact, the public deposits are not only protected, but they are protected at the expense of the individual depositors. What shall we say of a national bank which willingly gives the government specific security and then opposes the protection of depositors. And, strange to say, these big banks that get the big deposits from the government upon specific security are the very ones that have fought and are fighting the system for the guaranty of depositors. It is time that the depositors understood the situation and get together for their own protection. Will any banker who is opposing the guaranty system and explain why it is not right to protect individuals?—Bryan's Companion. We cheerfully confess to be just old-fashioned enough to sit in front of a fireplace. Cause of Stomach Troubles. "Going Back To the Farm." "A Reader," referring to the problem of the unemployed, says: "Men and women that have failed really to sustain themselves in the city, those that 'can not hold a job' will tent on what is usually meant by a farm, even if they could be induced to go to one—which they can not. Experience has shown that such families can not be thus helped, even if given a farm and its necessary tools, without money and without price. They do not know what to do with the land, and having no taste, in most cases, for the life, they have no desire to learn. They get discouraged, and drift back to the city; they would rather fight for a crust, or starve in a crowd than enjoy plenty in the loneliness and steady work work of the farm. They have never learned to think, or to plan for themselves, and they can not direct their work to any success; they are like children, in many respects they are even more helpless in the country than in the city. The idea of relieving the city of its congestion by transplanting its surplus people to those who belong to the soil because they were bred there, and know what to do with the soil, and who are tired of their mistake in giving up the life they were fitted to enjoy for the struggle in which they should have no part. As to those having no family ties, the life on the farm holds little attraction for them, for the farm people are not their ways, and the wage, great or small, does not companionship with their own class, to be found only in the city's bustling streets. This class would not profit the farm employer, even if it could be induced to work in the fields—which it can not. They must work out their own salvation; they have their own niches to fill, they are, probably, the 'straw' without which 'bricks' can not be made. They have their own uses, though we may not know what it is."—E. L. A Higher Health Level. "I have reached a higher health level than I have since Dr. King's New Life Pills," writes Jack Burdette, of West Franklin, Maine. "They keep my stomach, liver, bowels working just right. If these pills discontinue, my total energy will be reduced at Nashville Drug Co."
