Our Quarrel Is Not With Mexico.

Baltimore Sun.

President Wilson's address to Congress makes it plain that he has no intention of plunging this country into war with Mexico. If any plunging is to be done, Huerta will have to do it. We have no quarrel with Mexican people. We have just one issue to settle at present, and that is with the man who seized the government of Mexico as the fruit of assassination, and who refuses to make reparation for the arrest of our sailors at Tampico and the subsequent arrest of a United States mail carrier at Vera Cruz. What we propose to do, and all that we propose to do in the beginning, is to punish Huerta, the despot, by occupying the two places where these outrages against American citizens occurred. We are striking back at the usurper who has struck at us and who has been striking at law and liberty, constitution and order in Mexico ever since the murder of Madero. We do not admit that he represents Mexico in any true or lawful sense whatever. President Wilson has steadfastly refused from the beginning to recognize his claim to represent his country. We still refuse to recognize his representative capacity. We are dealing with him as a de facto tyrant and not with the country whose government he has usurped. We are resorting to legitimate retaliation and reprisals against this individual, not against his nation; we are asserting our right to respectful treatment, not invading Mexico.

AUTOMOBILE NEWS.

Around Detroit, Mich., they say this story is true and that the affair took place during the rainy season last fall when the country roads were, to say the least, somewhat sticky.

A Ford man with a party of four in his car, so the story goes, was returning to the city after a trip into the country. About ten miles from the pavements he came upon a "high-powered," high-priced, heavy car in trouble. Its wheels had found resting places in about a foot of mud and refused to turn.

In the car were two men and three women. The men were fuming. They had been working for three hours or more to get out of the mud, they said.

As the Ford man drew alongside, the owner of the stranded car hailed him:

"How'll you swap cars, pardner?" "Don't know as I want to trade you," said the Ford man, "but I'll try to pull you out if you want me to."

"I don't think you can do it, but you can try. But I'd rather trade cars and be done with it. I want a car that'll go. I've got to get these ladies in to town somehow. Seriously, I bought this car just two months ago and I'll swap 'er even up for your Ford."

"What do I want of a big thing like that?" asked the Ford man. "I couldn't afford to support it, and then, too, I like to go where and when I please without being afraid of getting stuck by the way."

While they talked they had been hitching the two cars together with a rope and at a signal the Ford man threw in his clutch and the two cars forged slowly ahead. When the big car had been hauled to a hard place in the road, it was unhitched from the Ford.

"I'm a thousand times obliged to you, Old Man," called its owner. "You can bet that when I get in the city I'll sell this car and buy a Ford."

To Die for Killing Deputy Sheriff.

Greensboro News.

Jim McClure, a negro, is under sentence for the killing of R. L. Bain, police officer of deputy sheriff at Pomona mills in August last. The killing grew out of a near riot between some white and some colored boys at the end of the car line at Pomona over a banana. The banana had fallen from a bunch that a negro boy had on a street car and a white boy grabbed it and refused to give it up on the car. McClure was believed by the officer to have taken a hand in the row and Bain went with a party to arrest him. The negro refused to be arrested without a warrant and drew a gun to resist arrest. Later the officer and party decided to arrest him for drawing the gun. He was ordered several times to halt and suddenly the negro turned and fired the fatal shot at the officer. The Supreme Court sustains the trial and conviction in the lower court.
