OUR OPPORTUNITY IN SOUTH AMERICA.

South America in the year 1912 imported over 965,000,000 worth of foreign goods, and as strange as it may seem the United States furnished only about 14 per cent. of these imports.

Mr. Chas. W. Johnson, of Charlotte, president of the Brown Manufacturing Company of Concord, the Highland Park chain of mills in Charlotte and also of mills at Rock Hill, has just returned home from New York, where he had been on business connected with his mills.

The annual convention of the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union will be held at Fort Worth, Texas, beginning September 1. It will be the most important meeting of the union that has ever been held.

to be discussed. The financing of the farming interest of the nation through the stringency the European war will probably cause, will be the main subject to be considered.

HOW TO PLANT WINTER-GROWING CROPS

Every farmer in the state should be interested in getting planted a large acreage of winter cover crops, such as rye, clovers, vetches, grasses, etc. These crops are needed to hold the soil together, to prevent washing and leaching, to furnish grazing and forage, to gather nitrogen from the air and to turn under to improve the soil.

Specific directions for planting cannot be given that will suit all conditions of soil and weather, but some general suggestions may prove beneficial to farmers who desire to get the best results possible for money and time spent for seed and in getting ready to plant.

Next in importance to good, sound seed, is a good seed-bed. The land should be broken not less than eight inches deep from two to six weeks before time to plant so that it will have time to settle. Shallow plowing does not let enough water into the soil. If breaking is done immediately before planting and no rain falls the soil should be rolled (when dry enough) to make it firm, but should be well disced or harrowed to make the top soil loose and fine. The matter may be summed up by saying that a good seed bed requires deep breaking, setting, thorough harrowing and moisture. The farmer who neglects these things will generally fail to produce a stand. By all means watch soil conditions and, if possible, plant when there is moisture present.

Many fields will need lime, especially if any legume is to be planted there. Determine this in time and apply lime before planting, if it is needed. All legumes will need inoculation to furnish beneficial bacteria, unless the soil already contains the germs. Inoculation may be had by spreading soil from fields which the special crop has grown and been found to contain the germs. The State Department of Agriculture, Raleigh, is now prepared to furnish inoculating material at fifty cents per acre. The U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., will furnish it free. It can be had from there through the Demonstration Agents. In getting it from either Department, the order should be sent in three or four weeks before time to use the material.

The best time to plant winter grasses and clover in this state varies very much on account of our varying altitude. In a general way we would say that the best thirty days for planting are about as follows: In the mountains from August 15 to September 15; in the Coastal Plains from September 5 to October 5; along the tide water region from September 15 to October 15; Remember that these crops should be planted early enough to get a good hold in the soil by winter, and yet late enough so that they will not be killed by the hot sun of late summer. This requires good judgment and knowledge on the part of the farmer.

TYPHOID FEVER MUST GO.

So Decreed by Whole-Time County Health Officers.
The eleven counties in North Carolina employing whole-time health officers are now feeling the force of the "anti" campaigns at work in their borders. Typhoid is a preventable disease and typhoid must go, they say.

Dr. H. H. Utley, of Johnston county, breaks the record by vaccinating 280 people in 300 minutes. Dr. R. E. Washburn, of Ashe county, during the month of July gave 2,582 inoculations for typhoid fever while Dr. E. F. Strickland, of Forsyth, has administered 1,823 doses. Dr. R. W. Page, of Robeson county, says: "I could use 3,000 or 4,000 doses within the next three or four weeks if the serum is available." From Dr. G. M. Cooper, of Sampson county, comes this statement: "I have engagements for every day for three weeks ahead, with two or three exceptions, and all on request of the people themselves for the treatment. Vaccination against smallpox, free, more than 1,500 persons to date since January."

At the hands of these and other wide-awake health officials, the chance for having typhoid will be reduced to the minimum. Its doom is inevitable, and with typhoid are going hookworm and smallpox. What these officials are doing for community health improvement is just beginning to be known and felt. Not yet have they come fully into their own.

ASK ME NO MORE. Ask me no more. The moon may draw the sea. The cloud may stoop from heaven and take the shape, With fold to fold, of mountain or of cape. But, oh, too fond, when have I answered thee? Ask me no more. What answer should I give? I love not hollow cheek or faded eye. Yet, oh, my friend, I will not have thee die! Ask me no more, lest I should bid thee live. Ask me no more. Thy fate and mine are sealed. I strove against the stream and all in vain. Let the great river take me to the main. No more, dear love, for at a touch I yield. Ask me no more. - Alfred Tennyson.

THAT STOLEN KISS

By AUGUSTUS G. SHERWIN.
"Decision affirmed."
Vera Dennison stood looking down at a telegram bearing these words, a date and a signature. The same told her that the brief message came from the city where the state supreme court met, that a legal friend of her father had sent it and that it was a crushing blow to the hopes, prospects and ambition of that dear father, who had fought so hard.

"It means ruin," she said sadly, "poor father!"
Poor father, indeed! She had marveled when a few minutes since he had left the house abruptly without kissing her good-by, as was usual with him. Now she comprehended that a terrible blow had blighted all his hopes, and the quick tears came to her eyes as she realized that he had received a death blow to his fondest ambitions.

heart sank as she noted that he had become visibly older within the hour. "Dear father," she spoke, springing down the steps and fondly linking her arm within his own. "You have been to the office?"
"For the last time, dear," was the gentle but hopeless reply. "Oh, papa! What do you mean?"
"That my broken practice will not admit of the expense of maintaining an office," was the reply. "I have given it up. I have ordered my law library sent here. What little business I shall have can be done quite well from the house."

"Is there no way that you can retain your office, father?" she inquired. "Surely you can build up a new legal practice."
"My child, I am too old, worn out," declared the judge wearily.
"Perhaps, then, a rest will do you good," murmured Vera soothingly. "Do not worry, father. We have the little home here and we shall get along some way. I can get a few more art students, and that will help."

Why Not?
Little Anna's fainter was a baseball enthusiast and had taken her to several games. One Sunday morning she went with him and her mother to the service in the Methodist church. Anna was not much interested in the sermon until the minister warmed up to his subject and the older man near the pulpit began to shout, "Anna!" "Halliday!" etc. On the way home she looked up at her father and exclaimed, "Say, Pop, who writes the team-up front writing for the press?"

"There were some points my representative did not bring up. That is not his fault, however. You know I lost some valuable memoranda and a volume with some important decisions affecting our case. I have never been able to find them and my memory has been poor since my last spell of sickness. Oh, by the way, about my clerk—'young Morton.'"

"Yes, papa," said Vera, and she lowered her eyes and flushed slightly. She had come to know her father's law student quite well. She cherished him as a loyal trusted friend of the judge and liked him for that.
"Ward Morton asks permission to come to the house and study in the library," explained the judge. "Poor fellow! I am sorry for his sake. He does not want to make a new connection, however. With three months' study he can qualify for the bar and start in for himself."

Out of the change in the professional life of Judge Dennison there grew a sweet romance. Ward Morton came daily to the house and studied in the library. Vera could not help but meet him. This young man received a commission for copying some old documents involving quite good pay. He asked Vera to assist him and she was glad to earn a little extra money.

One morning Vera was in the library arranging some books on their shelves and dusting and cleaning up generally. It was quite early and she expected to complete her task before Morton arrived. He surprised her on the little step ladder, however, arranging some ponderous law volumes.

"You must let me take that heavy work off your hands, Miss Dennison," insisted Morton in his usual courteous way, and they chatted pleasantly, she handing up the books and Morton arranging them.

Then suddenly a ponderous tome slipped from his hand. There was a sharp cry of pain as it struck Vera on the face and fell to the floor. Instinctively she raised her hand to her injured cheek.

"Oh, how awkward of me!" cried Morton, self-reproachfully. "You are hurt?" and in deep solicitude he removed her hand from her cheek. A dark bruise showed.

"And my stupid fault!" said Morton, and then because he could not help it, he pitiably reverently with his lips touched the cruel bruise.

In confusion Vera knelt to pick up the book, and Morton assisted her in gathering up some papers that had fallen out of it. Suddenly Vera uttered a quick cry.

"Your cheek—" began the solicitous Morton.

"No! no!" she waved, drawing with shy consciousness away from this fervent admirer, as if fearing his earnest sympathy would carry him away a second time—"these papers! Oh, father must know about these at once!"

Within the hour Judge Dennison was the happiest man in all christendom. A mere accident had brought to light the mislaid decisions and memoranda in the great will case, and as he and Morton went over them both were sanguine that a higher appeal would win them their case.

In the memory of that stolen kiss in the library there could be but one outcome—a love declaration, an engagement and a happy, happy wedding. (Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman.)

CITY OF CROESUS AND MIDAS

Situated in Spot Rich in Legends of Ancient Geography and Mythology.

There is a river which flows northward, eastward and northward again, finding its hazardous way through the rugged mountains of ancient Lydia, in Asia Minor. Its waters, now scant and limp, now voluminous and turbid, says a writer in Scribner's Magazine, are poured at length into a larger and more sluggish stream, which, fed by a hundred other snow born fountains that descend from the almost perpetually snow clad mountains on the south, flows westward, in its turn, through a broad and fruitful plain and then through a narrow defile, to lose itself and its yellow hue at last in the clear expanse of the Bay of Smyrna, which at this point represents the Aegean sea.

Her Treasure.
Styles—Who is that in the next room I hear calling somebody her 'precious treasure'?
Myles—Oh, that's my wife.
"But I didn't know you had any children?"
"We haven't; the precious treasure she's referring to is a dozen eggs she bought this morning."

COUNTRY AIR.

Though I'dine smilt the splendour
Of a palace day by day,
Where the lights are softly glowing
And the music throbs away;
Watch the people all around me,
But not caring for the fare,
For I'm longing for the open
And a breath of country air.

With an appetite that's faded,
Day by day I wonder through
All the stuff that's placed before me,
Caring not just what I do,
All around me folks are laughing—
It's their way toadden care;
While I'm longing for the open
And a breath of country air.

Take me back into the country,
Where the winds are blowing free,
Where the sunshine and the shadows
Mingle into mystery.
There I'll cast aside my frippery,
For the old hill trail prepare,
And I know that I'll be happy,
Drinking in the country air.
—Harry M. Dean.

Simmons Talks for Cotton.

Charlotte Observer.
The speech Senator Simmons delivered a few days ago on the situation in the South in cotton and cotton goods and which appeared in the Congressional Record, has been since issued in pamphlet form, and it is a document well worth this enlarged publicity. Senator Simmons is particularly well informed on cotton conditions, and in his speech he presented the facts in the effective and forceful manner for which he has become somewhat famous. His influence is being directed to a practical plan for giving relief to the Southern farmers by aiding them to keep their cotton off the market until the return of better prices. He believes the reserve system will enable the banks in the cotton states to finance the situation. Senator Simmons' presentation of the case naturally attracted much attention in Washington.
