Unless something is done, the probabilities are the power of towns and cities to raise revenue from this source will be further restricted, if not altogether eliminated.

"With reference to the state highway program, it is admitted that at least eight per cent. of the revenue to care for the interest on the debt created for this purpose being raised and motor vehicles is paid by towns and cities, in view of the fact that eighty per cent. of the motor vehicles, oils and gasoline are sold within their corporate limits.

TAKING CENSUS OF THE STATES ILLITERATES

Proposed Demands Campaign Outlined by Miss Kelly.

(By the Associated Press.) Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 27.—Asserting that widespread illiteracy is the chief heritage of inefficient elementary schools, and that in order for the state to promote successfully its educational program, adult illiterates of the country districts must be informed on the state government and other vital subjects, Miss Elizabeth Kelly, commissioner of adult illiterates, today outlined to the North Carolina parent-teacher organizations a proposed remedial campaign.

As one of the first steps, the commissioner proposes to strengthen elementary schools "until all children, regardless of location or section, shall have equal opportunity," thereby preventing future adult illiterates. Second, in connection with such schools, she "would provide instruction of the adults 'who have never had a chance.'" "This not only would take care of the illiterates," said Miss Kelly, "but would also minister to that other class equally needy and often more responsive—the class that has not mastered the tools of an education, reading, writing and arithmetic, so, naturally well to use them without aid."
