Billboards and Newspapers.
 Philadelphia Record.
 Two pieces of news come to readers within the past few days, both from London. One refers to the dismantling of 6000 roadside advertising signs by a large gasoline selling corporation as part of a movement to end the disfigurement of the English landscape with advertisements. Tire and other manufacturers have also joined in removing the posters that have proved offensive and the organizations of nature-lovers have reason to feel that they have won a notable victory so far in their efforts to purge the countryside of the billboards. The other news item announces the departure of Sir Charles Higham for the United States early in the new year. As England's chief publicity man, Sir Charles has been commissioned by India tea growers to begin a campaign for the wider use of tea in America. This he will do through the advertising columns of the daily newspapers.

Giacomo Puccini, composer of "Madame Butterfly," has recovered in Italy because "One Fine day" was taken from the opera and jazzed, according to reports.

GIVES MODERN VIEW OF THE SAHARA DESERT

Tourist Parties Now "Do" the Section With Easy Comfort.
 Philadelphia Record.
 The impressions of the Sahara gotten from the school geographies are all wrong, according to Horace D. Ashton, of Yonkers, N. Y., Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and member of the Explorers' Club, who gave an illustrated talk before the Geographical Society in Witherspoon Hall, last night, on "By Caravan Through the Garden of Allah."
 One of the pictures shown was a realistic representative of a sandstorm, taken by a specially designed camera.
 So far from the Sahara being one vast plain of sandy flatness, the lecturer said that when he was sent to take photographs of sand dunes in that district, he had to go 700 miles from Algiers before he could find enough sand to be dignified by the appellation "dune." There is a belt of sand, between 150 and 200 miles wide, which goes on for 1,500 miles, but the Sahara itself contains ice-capped mountains 10,000 feet high, and depressions from 6,000 to 7,000 feet deep.
 Travel on the Sahara has been made comfortable, he said, since the French occupation, and touring parties now "do" the desert with cold water at every meal and clean sheets on beds and clean table linen every day.
 He ridiculed the claim of a French automobile concern purporting to show that with five of its cars the great waste was gone over, back and forth, in six weeks.
 "I happen to know that it took 18 months," he said, "and the preparations used up 50 cars. There was a whirlwind finish in six weeks by five cars, and of that it was made to appear that the tractor cars of this particular house had performed a miracle on the Sahara."

 A mammoth collective damage suit brought against the German government by 80,000 Belgians who were deported during the war is to come up for hearing today before the German-Belgian mixed Arbitration Tribunal sitting in Paris.
 Presidents and executive officers of state and national farm organizations, with a membership of over 700,000 farmers, representing most of the wheat and cotton growing states, are to hold a four-day demonstration in Washington this week in support of the Norris-Sinclair government marketing corporation bill.

Fenner and Beane's Grain Letter.
 Chicago, Jan. 4.—Wheat was quiet and easier at the outset, with weaker cables, a limited export demand, and scattered selling due to continued favorable news from abroad, and with claims that Argentine and Australia were underselling Manitoba wheats. On the break, scattered support developed and the market rallied sharply, getting its stimulus from the strength in corn.
 The letter resulted in considerable covering of shorts and uncovered a strong technical position, the market closing strong at the day's highs.
 A decided increase in speculative activity in corn helped bring about a sharp upturn. Leading eastern and western professionals absorbed the early offerings, and started a sleeping short interest to covering. The bulge was not without foundation. Receipts were very light notwithstanding good weather, and even on the bulge no material increase in country offerings was noted. Cash demand was good, and the cash market led the advance, bulging more than two cents a bushel.
 Oats averaged somewhat higher, helped materially by the bulge in corn and the strength in other feed grains, with shorts covering on the small receipts.
 The bulge brought about considerable profit taking.

FENNER AND BEANE.
The Stone Mountain Monument.
 Charlotte Observer.
 To the people who have not kept pace with the progress of the great memorial work on Stone Mountain, under the direction of the sculptor Borglum, word that one of the panels, that commemorating General Lee and his staff, has been finished and will be unveiled on the 10th will surprise. The exercises will be under the management of the Stone Mountain Confederate Monumental Association, and are of official sanction by the state of Georgia. The unveiling of the first group of statuary will be occasion for a great gathering of Confederates and descendants. The completed grouping will constitute one of the greatest marvels in memorial work in the world. There will be carried on the sloping sides of a large mountain of solid granite a succession of panels that will in fact represent the Confederate army in review. Borglum will get the honor, but to the women of Georgia and the South will belong the glory.

An Expensive Notice.
 Pat—"What be yer charge fer a funeral notice in yer paper?"
 Editor—"Fifty cents an inch."
 Pat—"Good heaven! An' me poor brother was six feet high."

Who Pays For Advertising?

Not the manufacturer, for he thereby procures more business, the profits from which more than offset the advertising cost.
 Not the retailer, for advertised brands sell easiest, turn quickest and therefore yield the greatest on the amount invested per year.
 Not the person who buys the advertised article, for the cost of production has been brought down by increased business and the cost of selling has been reduced because advertising has already practically completed the sale.
 Advertising is an investment which produces returns and therefore pays for itself.
