McLEAN'S MAJORITY BIGGEST EVER RECEIVED IN PRIMARY

Bailey Made Issues But They Didn't "Take" With Democrats of State. Brock Barkley in Charlotte Observer. Raleigh, June 10.—With Angus Wilton McLean's majority finally listed and halted in the neighborhood of 65,000, the primary, although, has turned to the discussion and interpretations of how it all happened.

In the light of the returns, which have accorded for McLean the greatest majority a candidate for governor ever received in the primary, it seems ridiculous that the campaign of Mr. Bailey should have been taken seriously.

Two weeks ago the Bailey campaign was promising enough to command serious attention, but over night almost it began to fade away as votes "melted" by the hundreds.

Today men experienced in politics made the assertion that had the primary been delayed 10 days, McLean's majority would have been a hundred thousand.

Mr. McLean made a wonderfully popular average citizen. He was not flashy or oratorical or sensational. He got on the platform and made a straightforward speech, and he left the impression, which grew deeper as the campaign progressed, that he was substantial and serious and more concerned with the discussion of matters of State interest than in making points to influence voters.

Mr. Bailey, on the other hand, could not rouse the folks, although as a speaker he is supposed to be pretty good at whooping things up. He handled the voters like a lawyer would handle a jury, offering what showed promise of winning a verdict. The "issues" made their appeal for a while, but the mass of voters refused to take them seriously.

Hints From a House-Wife's Kitchen Diary

New Season's Recipes

A NOURISHING LIMA BEAN LOAF
Spring brings with it the opportunity for the housewife to exercise her ingenuity in providing her household with vegetable substitutes for the ordinary meat dishes. Here, for example, is a lima bean loaf. Use one cup of dried lima beans, put to soak overnight. In the morning drain and cook in boiling water slowly until the beans are tender, but have not lost their shape. Drain them in an enameled ware colander. Melt two and one-half tablespoons of butter, and into that stir two and one-half cups of bread crumbs. The crumbs should be taken from the soft part of the bread, not from the crust. Add one tablespoon of chopped parsley and one-quarter of a tablespoon of powdered sage; also one and one-quarter teaspoons of salt. Beat three eggs and mix with the beans. Stir in the bread crumb mixture. Have ready an enameled ware breadpan well buttered. This will turn out quite solid and can be sliced as one would veal loaf.

EARLY RHUBARB BEST
The appearance of rhubarb in her garden reminds the housewife that she must see about her enameled ware preserving kettle—the only utensil she can use in cooking rhubarb. If the housewife means to preserve rhubarb for winter use, she should use it when it first comes out. We are all apt to think of the rhubarb as just a fresh vegetable to be eaten at once and to leave the preserving until we have grown tired of the stewed form. The later-grown rhubarb is harder.
