tion of a formal statement setting forth his position to the country, and replying to the formal offer extended to him by La Follette leaders.

Several days ago Senator Wheeler announced he could not support John W. Davis, the Presidential nominee of his party, although he intended to work for the Democratic state ticket in Montana, and to give his aid toward the re-election of his colleague, Senator Thomas J. Welsh Senator Wheeler later sent a letter to Wm. H. Johnston of the machinists union, who headed a committee that called on him vesterday, accepting the nomination. In this letter he began his campaign with a broadside against the political affiliations of Calvin Coolidge and John W. Davis.

"I am a Democrat, but not a Wall Street Democrat," he said. "The Democratic party has wantonly abandoned a great opportunity for great public service." Both the democratic and republican parties, he declared, had "ignored the call of the unorganized millions who are the victims of thep resent economic disorders."

Senator Wheeler said he would announce his decision within 24 hours.

Some of those who consulted with him during the day declared they were confident he would be a candidate, although he announced two days ago he would decline indorsement if it were offered him.

Efforts to get Senator Wheeler to change his mind were renewed as a group of La Follette supporters, instructed by the Cleveland convention to indorse a vice presidential candidate acceptable to the Wisconsin senator, and the Montana senator, a delegation representing the national committee of the conference for progressive political action called on him to urge him to accept the nomination.
