"LET GEORGE DO IT."

Monroe Enquirer.
When the average citizen of this community gets what he considers a "dirty deal," from whatever source the deal may spring, the average citizen thinks it is the duty of the newspaper to expose the "crook" and keep his name out of the fight.
There are people in this community whose main thought of the newspapers is that they are to serve the public, fight its battles, boost its town, yell for home trading, brag on local merchants, gloss over local vices, exaggerate local virtues, headline unimportant boosts for business, and stay crazy over the general excellence and wonderful ability of the subscriber to do the thinking.
These people are hair-trigger critics of the editor, of the news, of the motives, of anything and everything in the paper that does not carry out the principles set forth in the imagination of the thinker, as set out in the first paragraph above.

THE COOLIDGE MENTALITY

Philadelphia Record.
Many persons have doubtless wondered why President Coolidge, after putting his ideas of economy into practice, even to the cutting down of the number of towels and paper drinking cups used in the White House, signed the outrageous bill passed by Congress raising the salaries of Representatives and Senators from $7,500 to $10,000 a year. This added an extra burden of nearly $1,400,000 upon the taxpayers of the country without any corresponding benefits.
The explanation of this seemingly contradictory action is to be found, according to a friendly apologist, in the peculiar Coolidge mentality. The President was, as is well known, opposed to the bill, and he deferred action upon it until the last moment possible. Then he approved it with reluctance, apparently in the belief that a veto would be futile in view of the almost unanimous action of Congress in passing the measure. Commenting on this seeming discrepancy between preaching and practice, The Springfield Republican, a supporter of the President and for many years in close touch with his public career, makes this analysis of his mental workings, which may be found helpful in explaining his course to less well-informed persons:
It is characteristic of Mr. Coolidge that until action takes place by which he becomes irrevocably committed no decision or conclusion his mind may favor assumes any finality. A question remains open until it is closed by circumstances. Conversely it accounts for his characteristic reluctance throughout his career to commit himself on any public question concerning which he is not required to express an opinion. By these methods he

History in a Nutsell.

Some time after the school system was adopted by the navy a Filipino was directed to write an essay on George Washington. His contribution was as follows: "George Washington was sore because American persons was not free. He sailed for England on my ship and say to king: 'I express declarations of Independence for American persons.' King, he say 'Nobin' doin' and Mr. Washington tell Admiral Dewie to shoot big guns at him. Bimbeby King, he say he will not run over against the advantages he anticipates from his action in signing the bill, and today American persons she is free."

SHAMELESS CAPS

Statesville Daily.
When it developed that the Secretary of State was buying expensive motor cars for use in his department, and that there was rather free use of State-owned cars for private purposes, it was a distinct jolt to many people. It was a surprise to find that a man of the unquestioned standing and integrity of the Secretary of State would sanction official extravagance; that's just what it was—extravagance at the expense of the State.
But it is a greater jolt to learn of outstanding extravagance in the State highway department. Probably no official in the service of the State in many years has had so large a share of public confidence as Mr. Page, the head of the commission. That confidence had its basis in the fact that Mr. Page is a man of exceptional business capacity. His honesty was taken for granted. His personal honesty in a public official counts little if he hasn't the capacity to so administer his office as to get the most and the best work for the smallest expense. It was believed that Chairman Page had that to the fullest degree, and it was the belief that he was getting for the State's full dollar's worth of work for every dollar expended that sanctioned for him the highest salary ever paid a public official in the State. General opinion was that he was worth the money; that he earned it.
Now it falls out that Chairman Page has permitted gross extravagance in the private use of motor cars at public expense. The recent General Assembly, moved by the developments in the office of the Secretary of State, passed an act making it a misdemeanor for anybody to use a State-owned car for any private purpose whatsoever. Now comes the auditor of the highway department and volunteers the information that the law will save the highway department $50,000 a year. Let that sink in. Employees of the highway department have, in plain language, been talking and using the State's property as their own to the extent (estimated) of $50,000 a year. Every month of the twelve employees of the highway commission used cars at a cost of $4,166.66 2/3 to the taxpayers of the State—not in the performance of service to the State but for their own devices, for joy rides, etc. There is no contention that it was understood that anybody should use a car at State expense for private purposes in addition to his regular wage. No, sir, State highway employees simply reached out and took

Not Good as it Looked.

Lexington Dispatch.
North Carolina voters anxiously jumped at the constitutional amendment providing for fifty per cent exemption from taxation on mortgaged homes up to the amount of $8,000. Since mortgage holders are also supposed to pay the obligation over his home, it looked like this amendment promised relief from double taxation.
A review of the act in the North Carolina Law Review holds that the amendment will bring practically no relief. It permits the holders of the mortgage to let it also at half face value, as well as giving the owner of the mortgaged home and lands this privilege. But the amendment requires that the loans made for not less than one year and at not over five and a half per cent interest, since such loans are about as plentiful as hen's teeth. The Review takes the view that little benefit will ever be derived.
The lender is required to live in the same county as the borrower to get the benefit on listing his property provided he has been able to get the loan for not over five and a half per cent and for not less than a year. Since few counties now list real estate at over fifty per cent actual sale value this provision amounts to nothing even if advantage could be taken of it.

privileges, the clergyman's wife asked questions which, coming from anybody else, would have been thought impertinent.
"I presume you carry a memento of some kind in that pocket you wear?" she said.
"Yes, ma'am," said the parishioner. "It's a lock of my husband's hair."
"But your husband is still alive," the lady exclaimed.
"Yes, ma'am, but his hair is gone."

PAINS ALL OVER

Lady Says She Took Cardui and Never Saw Such Improvement—Was So Weak Couldn't Stand.

Weatherby, Miss.—Mrs. James H. Hall, of this place, writes that she was "getting weaker all the time" when Cardui, the woman's tonic, was first brought to her attention. After she had taken Cardui a while, she writes that she "never did see such an improvement."
"I suffered all the time and had pains all over," says Mrs. Hall. "I was so weak I could not stand. My skin was cold and flabby. I did not have any color. I had always been a very active woman—used to outdoor exercise, walking and going where I pleased, and to get down, not able to get myself a drink, was indeed a hardship."
"Nothing seemed to help me, till I began on Cardui. The first bottle seemed to strengthen me, and I sent for five more. By the time I had taken these, I was on my feet, going around, doing my work, gained in health and strength."
"I took two more bottles, and I am well and strong. Can work my garden. I haven't had any more sickness."
