Slender Line Is Popular

THE slenderizing line of this silk gown, printed in mavy blue and white, should endear it to the hearts of all those women who can't quite decide to take no food with their meals. The vestee and front panel are of filated georgette crepe and there is a collar of ecru lace. It is caught together at the front with an ornament of beads and two long tassels.

Helping Bus Companies.
Raleigh, March 31.—The State corporation commission is wrestling with a new problem these days, that of helping bus companies to settle their differences as to the schedules they will adopt. The commission plans, as nearly as possible, to have the bus companies arrive at their own conclusions. However, it is vested with the authority to issue absolute orders.

Efforts to Procure Ship Line for North Carolina.
In the recent tour which was taken by North Carolinians to Bermuda, efforts were made to interest the trade development board of that island in the establishment of a ship line to North Carolina. The following letter received by H. W. Blanks shows that the matter is being considered. The text of the letter is as follows:

Mr. H. W. Blanks,
Chamber of Commerce,
Concord, N. C.
Dear Mr. Blanks:

The Bermuda Trade Development Board has been considering the possibilities of establishing a steamship service between a southern port and Bermuda. The recent successful voyage of the S. S. Fort Hamilton from Wilmington, N. C., has been noted with interest and the board would be pleased to be advised whether your chamber feel that it would be possible to establish a permanent service between one of the ports of North Carolina and Bermuda.

Yours very truly,

Secretary.

MRS. GUILFOIL FAILS TO MAKE APPEARANCE
Bond Forfeited and Captus Issued—McKinnon Hearing Postponed.

W. T. Bost in Greensboro News.
Raleigh, March 31.—Absence of Mrs. T. J. Guilfoil, defendant in a police court charge of immorality in which Representative D. P. McKinnon, of Robeson, is involved with her, caused continuance of the case this morning and the hearing will be held Thursday.

Counsel defending Mr. McKinnon had counted on Mrs. Guilfoil's presence to perfect their defence. Mr. McKinnon stood his ground and will resist an allegation of immorality. He will offer evidence of other witnesses that the little drinking party of which he was a member resulted in his complete knock-out and that so far as he was concerned, that was the end of his wrongdoing. He denies any knowledge whatsoever of Mrs. Guilfoil's presence in the room in which his friend carried him, undressed him and put him to bed. And the young Robesonian was placed there solely because his companion could neither walk him nor carry him home.

Mrs. Guilfoil was represented in many moods as the hearing drew near. Saturday night she and her husband were packing up and ready to take the steamers, Sunday night they were still here and standing their ground. Monday they were moved to travel again and Monday night they were supposed to be in town. Today the $100 bond was forfeited and a capias was issued.

The state replying on the testimony of three policemen that the pair were in the same bedroom and that Mrs. Guilfoil fled when they flashed a light on them, will press the immorality charge. For that reason Mrs. Guilfoil's testimony would have been important. It is very unlikely that she will remain to offer any, or that the state can get her back here for the purpose of standing trial.

MEMORY OF JOHN C. CALHOUN HONORED

Many Pilgrims Come to Pay Honor to Statesman's Memory.
Pendleton, S. C., March 31.—The old home of John C. Calhoun, near this place, was the scene for many pilgrims today, who came to pay tribute to the memory of the great Southern statesman on the seventy-fifth anniversary of his death. For many years the old Calhoun homestead has been carefully looked after by the trustees of Clemson College, which owes its existence largely to the fact that the great statesman's son-in-law, in his will left all Calhoun plantation, a grand property of 800 acres, together with the historic homestead and fifty odd thousand dollars, to the State of South Carolina to partially endow an industrial and agricultural college in which the sons of farmers of the state could obtain an education.

The old homestead has been preserved much as Calhoun left it. The same furniture, pictures, books and ornaments that he used in his leisure summer hours are to be seen today just as he left them. In the rear of the dwelling, the small frame structure, used by the orator as a law office in his early career, and later as a study, is also in a good state of preservation.

John C. Calhoun, with Henry Clay and Daniel Webster, were the great figures of the first half century of American constitutional history, whose names are identified with the majority of the most pregnant and picturesque incidents of that period. Each was a giant in the arena of political debate, and for a long number of years each at some time was pitted against another in a genuine battle of giants. Each of these remarkable men cherished an ambition to be President of the United States, but each failed to attain that exalted station. Calhoun, however, served twice as vice president.

Mr. Calhoun began his political career as a member of the Democratic party, but in the course of his long period of public activity he found himself allied at different times with all the other parties. He was the bravest and bitterest foe that Andrew Jackson had for a number of years, and the spirited conflict that these two memorable characters waged is one of the most sensational in American political history. Jackson at one time is found threatening to hang Calhoun, and Calhoun is found denouncing Jackson personally in the Senate as an instrument of corruption and tyranny.

Calhoun's dominant characteristic was his loyalty to his native state and to the interests of the South. He was one of the earliest and most vigorous advocates of the doctrine of free trade, which almost resulted in the separation of South Carolina from the Union in the early '30s. He led the successful fight for the annexation of Texas, which resulted in the Mexican war, and he was an uncompromising defender of the institution of slavery.

During the last years of his life Calhoun was indefatigable in his efforts to form such a union of the slave-holding states as should check the abolition movement and neutralize what he described as the constantly growing superiority of the North. He attributed this growth to unjust political conditions, which had transformed the nation from a federal republic into a huge democracy, and his plan is said to have been the formation of a new compact by which two presidents should be chosen, each to approve of the acts of Congress before they could become laws, one to be selected by the North and the other by the South.

Calhoun's last public utterance, after which he was carried exhausted from the chamber of the United States Senate to his deathbed, was on the general subject.
