MOMN POP

BY TAYLOR

The Dream of Floyd Collins.

The Gentlewoman.
If he had heeded the warning sent him in a dream, Floyd Collins, the cave explorer, would have been saved from the tragedy which overtook him and drew the attention of the entire country. Cave City and its immediate vicinity is honeycombed with these natural caverns and Collins was an enthusiast in locating them. He had unearthed several, notably beautiful; Crystal Cave was one, and he was of the opinion that another far more wonderful was lying close at hand. Not long before the accident which befell him, he had been exploring to hills around his father's farm, digging in the earth, moving stones, and crawling through the narrow, intricate passages thus made. At nightfall he went home and in conversing with his stepmother or some member of his family, he suddenly gave a shudder of horror and exclaimed,

"After I find this cave I'm through! I had an awful dream last night about it. I dreamed I was working under ground when suddenly rocks and dirt fell all about me and on me, and strange creepy things came crawling about me in the darkness. It was a sickening feeling; there alone, in the blackness of the cave, he'd down by rubbish, and shut out from the outside world while those horrible things closed on me as I lay there."
If this dream was not a warning what was? and if Floyd Collins had heeded the vision of the night, he might be well and happy today and the tragedy which put Cave City on the map would have been averted. God spoke to him in this dream, but he failed to accept the message and so met his fate in the terrible cave in the hill.
