CAREY SCORES IN 'FLAMING FORTIES'

Noted Star Does Some Good Work as Bret Harte Character, 'Tennessee's Pardner.'

Harley Carey and Bret Harte—what better combination could there be than the screen's best actor of western roles in a story by America's best writer on Western tales!

That's why 'The Flaming Forties,' the picture of Bret Harte's famous story, 'Tennessee's Pardner,' at the Concord Theatre, is one of the most realistic and entertaining films of the early West that we have seen.

And the other characters are brought to life with equal truth. Wm. Norton Bailey, as the outlaw, Desparde, or 'Tennessee,' as he was known to his partner; Jacquelin Gadsdon as his wife; James Mason as the double-eyed villain, Jay Bird Charley; Frank Noverson as Colonel Starbette and Wilbur Highby as Sheriff Pinky Riggs, all play their parts with life vigor and color that marks the true Bret Harte figure.

The story is replete with thrill and tinged with the spirit of mystery and adventure that is half the charm of all Mr. Harte's tales. There are fights numerous and various enough to please the most ardent fans and there is a romance rich in pathos and tender appeal.

Elliott J. Clawson who made the screen adaptation, Harvey Gates who wrote the continuity and Tom Forman, director, are to be congratulated on the splendid result of their combined effort.

If you are a Carey fan, or a lover of Bret Harte's tales or just a 'regular guy' who enjoys a picture—'if it's a good one'—his yourself down to the Concord Theatre today or tonight and see 'The Flaming Forties.'
