AS THE PRESIDENT SEES IT

In his Memorial Day address President Coolidge made an appeal for more vigilant enforcement of law on the part of State and local governments, pointing out that "what we need is not more federal government, but better local government."

"We are not a lawless people," said the President, "but we are too frequently a careless one. The multiplicity of laws, the varied possibilities of appeals, the disposition to technicality in procedure, the delays and consequent expense of litigation which inevitably inure to the advantage of wealth and specialized ability—all these have been recounted as reproaches to us."

"It is strange that such laxities should persist in a time like the present, which is marked by a determined upward movement in behalf of social welfare. But they do exist. They demonstrate a need for better, prompted, less irksome and expensive administration of the laws: for uniformity of procedure; for more accurate delimitation of state and federal authority."

We should be mindful of the enforcement of every law, the President rightly contends, for as he says "the police force which is administered on the assumption that the violation of some laws may be ignored has started toward demoralization." The President was just as correct in the statement that a community which upholds the police force is such action "is making dangerous concessions."

therefore again warns the farmers against putting all their faith in their cotton crop. "Should our farmers increase their dairying and poultry raising in the same ratio for the next five years as they have in the past, they will exceed the value of last year's cotton crop," says The Enquirer in advising farmers to be independent of cotton.

COMPLETE CONTROL OF MONTREAL IS SOUGHT

Presbyterians Would Withhold Financial Support Until That is Accomplished. Lexington, Ky., May 28.—The 65th general assembly of the Presbyterian church in the U. S. A., adjourned at 5:40 o'clock this afternoon, after having, in its closing minutes, adopted a resolution against "war as a means of settling disputes between nations," reconsidered its action and then adopting a substitute putting itself on record as favoring every forthright effort to secure the peace of the world.

Would Use Dam as Yaddin Bridge

Stanly News-Herald. "I have been thinking about it since you commenced to boost for the Yaddin River bridge on the Albemarle-Lexington highway," said Mr. S. H. Hearne to the News-Herald yesterday, "and as I lay awake the other night thinking about the proposition the idea struck me that the old Whitney dam might be utilized for that purpose. I believe, therefore, that the time is about ripe for the appointment of a committee to take the matter up with the Tallahassee Power Co. with the view to getting permission to use the big Whitney dam as a bridge, which would reduce the cost of bridging the Yaddin to one-half," he continued.

SYNOPSIS

Malone, a London newspaper reporter, rejected by the girl he loves because he has no heroic deeds to his credit, appeals to his editor for a dangerous assignment, and is sent to interview the irascible Professor Challenger, who has recently returned from a solitary expedition to South America with an amazing story, which no one believes, of the existence on a great plateau there of many forms of prehistoric life. By way of proof he exhibits to Malone two skeletons—one, of the cliffs beneath the plateau, the other of a monstrous animal resembling the stegosaurus—which he had found among the possessions of a dead explorer, Maple White; some blurred photographs, and a piece of the wing of a huge flying serpent, or pterodactyl, which he says he shot down. Malone is convinced of the professor's sincerity. At a scientific lecture that night which he invites the reporter to attend, Challenger creates an uproar by denying the speaker's assertion that mastodon life is extinct, and challenging the audience to send out an expedition to test the truth of his own theories. There are three volunteers: Professor Summerlee, a scientist; Malone, still in quest of adventure; and Lord John Roxton, well known sportsman and explorer. On a foggy morning in the spring the expedition sets out. Challenger, who has withheld directions until sailing time, comes to see them off.

"No, thank you," says he; "I should much prefer not to go aboard. I have only a few words to say to you, and they can very well be said where we are. I beg you not to imagine that I am in any way indebted to you for making this journey. I would have you to understand that it is a matter of perfect indifference to me, and I refuse to entertain the most remote sense of personal obligation. Truth is truth, and nothing which you can report can affect it in any way, though it may excite the emotions and allay the curiosity of a number of very ineffectual people. My directions for your instruction and guidance are in this sealed envelope. You will open it when you reach a town upon the Amazon which is called Manaos, but not until the date and hour which is marked upon the outside. Have I made myself clear? I leave the strict observance of my conditions entirely to your honor. No, Mr. Malone, I will place no restrictions upon your correspondence, since the ventilation of the facts is the object of your journey; but I demand that you shall give no particulars as to your exact destination, and that nothing be actually published until your return. Good-bye, sir. You have done something to mitigate my feelings for the loathsome profession to which you unhappily belong. Good-bye, Lord John. Science is, as I understand, a sealed book to you; but you may congratulate yourself upon the hunting-field which awaits you. You will, no doubt, have the opportunity of describing in the Field how you brought down the rocketing dimorphodon. And good-bye to you also, Professor Summerlee. If you are still capable of self-improvement, of which I am frankly unconvinced, you will surely return to London a wiser man."

His dry, half-sarcastic... manner is wholly unimpaired by any change in his surroundings. same spare, scraggy physique. As to his appearance, I have, as I recollect, described it in that portion of my narrative which I have left behind me in London. He is exceedingly neat and prim in his ways, dresses always with great care in white drill suits and high brown mosquito-boots, and shaves at least once a day. Like most men of action, he is laconic in speech, and sinks readily into his own thoughts, but he is always quick to answer a question or join in a conversation, talking in a queer, jerky, half-humorous fashion. His knowledge of the world, and very especially of South America, is surprising, and he has a whole-hearted belief in the possibilities of our journey which is not to be dashed by the sneers of Professor Summerlee. He has a gentle voice and a quiet manner, but behind his twinkling blue eyes there lurks a capacity for furious wrath and implacable resolution, the more dangerous because they are held in leash. He spoke little of his own exploits in Brazil and Peru, but it was a revelation to me to find the excitement which was caused by his presence among the riverine native, who looked upon him as their champion and protector. The exploits of the Red Chief, as they called him, had become legends among them, but the real facts, as far as I could learn them, were amazing enough.

CHAPTER VII "Tomorrow we Disappear into the Unknown"

I will not bore those whom this narrative may reach by an account of our luxurious voyage upon the Booth liner, nor will I tell of our week's stay at Para (save that I should wish to acknowledge the great kindness of the Pereira da Pinha Company in helping us to get together our equipment). I will also allude very briefly to our river journey, up wide, slow-moving, clay-lined streams, in a steamer which was little smaller than that which carried us across the Atlantic. Eventually we found ourselves through the narrow of Ouridos and reached the town of Manaos. Here we were rescued from the limited attractions of the local inn by Mr. Shortman, the representative of the British and Brazilian Trading Company. In his hospital Fazenda we spent our time until the day when we were ambushed by the open letter of instructions given to us by Professor Challenger. Before I reach the surprising events of that date I would desire to give a clearer sketch of my comrades in this enterprise.
