NEGRO WOMEN CAUGHT SHOPLIFTING, JAILED

Dresses and Dress Goods Secured Before They Were Apprehended by Parks-Belk's Clerks. Mary Suther and her daughter, Margaret, both colored, were arrested this morning and were lodged in the local jail awaiting a hearing this afternoon before Judge Caldwell on a charge of larceny.

The two women had, when apprehended, two dresses and sufficient cloth to make two other dresses. One dress and one piece of the goods was taken from Robinson's while the other was taken from Parks-Belk's.

According to the story told by employees at Parks-Belk, they were captured with the goods. They had come up to the second floor and had told the clerk that they did not care to buy anything but that they were just looking around preparatory to purchasing on Saturday.

Miss Grace Royster, the clerk who was in the immediate vicinity of the two negro women, heard one of them call to the other and say: "Mother, come here and look at this one."

Miss Royster then hurried to where they were standing behind a rack of dresses and noticed that the younger of the two was holding a large hat very close to her bosom, with the top of it closed. She asked the negro to let her see what was in it and the negro quickly replied that she had nothing. Pulling it away from the woman, Miss Royster discovered a dress inside.

Other clerks were called and it was found that the older woman had a dress and the dress goods wrapped in an old cloth she was carrying.

The police were called at once and Officers Widenhouse and Holdbrooks responded. Both the women seemed loath to go and went to far as to announce that they were not going. Officer Widenhouse had considerable difficulty propelling his prisoner down the street and to the jail where both were locked in.

CAROLINA MAYONNAISE CO. HAS BEEN ORGANIZED HERE

Concern Organized by E. G. Martin on Depot Street—To Manufacture Mayonnaise, Dressing, Relish and Chicken Salad. A new concern, the Carolina Mayonnaise Company, has been organized here and work was commenced on Monday distributing goods manufactured. E. G. Martin, formerly connected with the Carolina Cafe, is owner and manager of the plant which will manufacture mayonnaise dressing, relish, potato chips, peanut butter, salted peanuts and which later will make for sale deviled eggs and chicken salad.

The quarters occupied by the new concern are located on West Depot street, in the rear of what were the Legion club rooms. They are commodious and are admirably suited to work of the kind which Mr. Martin has begun.

As a motto for the label which is placed on each bottle of mayonnaise and relish manufactured in his place, Mr. Martin has "There Is None So Good." In the description of the contents, it is stated that the mayonnaise is "home made and uncooked."

Equipment purchased for the plant include a mayonnaise mixer, a capper, a potato peeler, a peanut husker and potato fryer. A machine for the manufacture of deviled eggs and another for cutting up chicken for salad have been ordered. The mixer is one of the most interesting machines, holding eighty quarts of liquid in the bowl and having an automatic feed for the oil. Large paddles stir the mayonnaise as it is made.

The output at the maximum is 200 cases per day with 24 jars to the case. At the present two persons are employed in addition to Mr. Martin and two more will be added to the force at an early date.

"SOFT SHOES" CAREY'S LATEST

Thrills and Humor Combined in Thrilling Tale of the Underworld. "Soft Shoes," the sixth Hunt Stromberg production starring Harry Carey which comes to the Concord Theatre for a two-day run today promises to be something of a decided novelty. In this feature Carey will step forth as a comedian and contribute laughs as well as thrills in his portrayal of the stellar role.

"Soft Shoes" is an original story written by Hunt Stromberg from an idea suggested by Carey himself and it gives the star the first comedy part in which he ever appeared.

The hard riding stunts that have attracted Carey's big following are said to be much in evidence, but in the main the star has a humorous role.

Although it opens in the familiar "cow country" the story soon shifts to San Francisco's underworld and Chinatown where the laughs come in regular Harold Lloyd or Buster Keaton fashion.

The cast includes Lillian Rich, who has the leading feminine role, Francis Ford, Stanton Heck, Jimmie Quinn, John Stepping and So-Jin, the Chinese prince of "The Thief of Bagdad." Lloyd Ingraham directed.

Mr. Benson Keeps Inviolate His Secret. The Uplift. One of the marvels of long service is to be found in the Concord Tribune office. There is one man in that shop that has seen a continuous service on that paper, barring several months, for thirty-five years. The maker of this record is Mr. Robert Benson.

Bob Benson has been perfectly bald-headed for many years. He plays the organ, and for many years was organist at Central Methodist Church. It is bald-headedness is natural with him and the condition of difficult music had nothing to do with the great change on the top of his head.

It may be evolution—the scientists may so conclude—but all at once Bob Benson was seen on the street with a most becoming head of hair, or a head of becoming hair, which is consonant with his general get-up and just enough silver strands among it to keep from being his age. He looks like another man, and is extremely happy, as he ought to be. Various bald-headed men in these parts have beseeched him to name the hair-cream that turned the trick in so short a time, but Bob preserves his secret. It is, indeed, a marvel that one man should hold down a job thirty-five years; and it is just as much a marvel that after years of complete baldness he should run across the very tonic that could make his hair grow on a barren spot so successfully, quickly and becomingly.

Huge Fossil Saurians Found in Railway Cut. Houquiam, Wash., June 19.—Surprising the discovery of the dinosaur skull and its identification by University of Washington scientists recently. J. H. Geoghegan, of Houquiam, has brought to light fossils and massive forms of saurians on an expenditure to the hills adjacent to Saguam Logging Company's camp No. 12.

Several forms visible on the sides of a grade cut for the logging company's railroad were easily identified by Geoghegan. Each measured close to 100 feet in length. Parts of the creature's limbs and all of the ribs were visible. Samples identified as teeth and a rib and were brought here.

At the Theatres. Fred Thompson in "The Bandit's Baby," a comedy, "It's a Bear," starring Joe Race, are being shown today and tomorrow at the Pastime.

Harold Lloyd in "Now or Never" and Harry Carey in "Soft Foot" are being shown today at the Concord Theatre.

Richard Dix in "Two Many Kisses" is at the Star today.

The Key to Success

Success depends primarily on a healthy liver and stomach. You can not think straight if these organs are not working properly. Mayr's Wonderful Remedy is usually successful in such cases. Our advice to everyone troubled in this way, especially when accompanied with bloating in the stomach, is to try this remedy. It is a simple, lightning preparation that removes the catarrhal mucus from the intestinal tract and allows the inflammation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. The Literary Spotlight

Waters Under the Bridge is the dramatic story of a genius who could do everything that is difficult and therefore chose to do "the most difficult thing of all—to live and die like other men." This story which is written by Mildred Cram and which appears in the May issue of Harper's Bazar, is part of sophisticated New York, a setting against which the splendid simplicity of Ugo Gregory, a primitive-tempered Sardinian, stands out in bold relief.

There were two women in Ugo's life. One of them had a passion for fame. She played Hedda Gabler at special matinees and wore gowns of surprising strangeness and looked like a wet codfish. The other was a girl of Ugo's own people, a girl who had "made a friend of sorrow and postponement and was on intimate terms with reality." The drama of these three lives, or rather the last act of it, takes place at one of those New York dinner parties at hand picked celebrities, and it is quite the most brilliant and fascinating piece of fiction that Mildred Cram has done.

Gouverneur Morris has written a realistic novel of the South, and it isn't a novel clothed in the obvious romance of the moonlight, jasmine, and poverty-stricken gentility either. The House of Orme, which begins in the June issue of Hearst's International and Cosmopolitan is more than that. It is a romance of the struggle of the new South.

Two brothers are the protagonists in this story; two men who, in themselves, represent the two opposing elements in the South. Brant is charming, indolent and untrustworthy. David is fine and courageous, determined, in spite of difficulties, to save the house of Orme from annihilation, and restore its ancient dignity. Of course there is a woman. Love in the lives of the two brothers follows the pattern of their childhood. Nora is all that David has dreamed of and been denied, but is won by Brant easily, and held tightly.

The poor immigrant may be a social and an economic problem, but he is also a gold mine to the fiction writer who understands him and sees the great pathos of his situation. Maria's story, the beginning of which appears in the June issue of Smart Set, is the life of an Italian boy and girl who came to America after their wedding at Easter-time. Silvio was a violinist of great promise and though he and Maria were young and poor their hearts were high. In the new country Silvio was to become famous in his art and make his fortune.

Then came disillusion. There was Silvio's illness and the consequent poverty and loneliness, ending in death. With three children to support and scarcely more than a child herself, Maria bravely fronts the future in a strange land, faced with the hideous necessity of giving her youngest child in adoption.

Does a Corporation Have a Soul? The Uplift. In this hurry-scurry age, when the material side of activity is emphasized, one is liable to conclude that ingratitude is wider spread than it really is. We are accustomed to hear and generally accept the statement that "corporations have no soul." It is not true—certainly not everywhere.

In this issue there will be found the account of the official opening of a $200,000 Y. a contribution to the welfare and service of a host of people, who have gathered round about one of the mammoth manufacturing centers of the South, the conception and creation of a genius and master builder. Its erection and gift is made in memory of the builders of this wonderful town.

The place is Kannapolis; the honored name which it bears is James William Cannon; and the donors is the Cannon Manufacturing Company, whose directors in ordering the construction of the magnificent building give forceful testimony of their abiding esteem and appreciation of the achievement of the creation of wonderful Kannapolis; and in doing so, they contribute to the joy and betterment of the hosts, a thing that would rejoice the heart of him whom they wish to honor.

We answer our own question. There is one corporation that has a soul—it speaks forever a volume of meaning to find a corporation, enjoying the fruits of one of the greatest manufacturing plants of the whole country, refusing to forget the builder, sets apart a great fund for the construction of a superbly appointed building which bears the name of James William Cannon, whose child, Kannapolis, with its wonderful agencies of industry, convenience, comfort and betterment is the climax in the life and activity of a most wonderful man. Though dead, James William Cannon still lives in opportunities and the help afforded thousands.

A great deed, nobly done and most fitting. It challenges the manufacturing plants of the East to show as much concern for the welfare and pleasure of their forces. Some corporations do give evidence of having a soul.
