No Fraternity Houses at Wake Forest College.

Monroe Enquirer. The Biblical Recorder says that at a meeting of trustees of Wake Forest College early in the year a request was made that the "fraternities be permitted to erect fraternity houses on land belonging to the college." The matter was referred to a special committee with instructions to report at the commencement meeting of the board. Last week at the meeting the committee recommended that the request be not granted, and the report was adopted. This ends a matter which has given some of the friends of the college much concern. Snobbish societies would be a better term for most college fraternities. Rich men's sons, and young men who can not afford to run with a fast crowd, compose college secret societies. All too often reports of orgies, behind bolted doors, come from such organizations. Belonging to a fraternity has been the undoing of many a college youth, if reports are to be credited. Wake Forest has done well to allow no buildings on its campus over which the college has no direct control.

Health Hints. Live as much as possible in the vitalizing sunlight. Breathe deeply and have plenty of fresh air, at night as well as in day time.

Take some form of exercise regularly, and in the open air when possible. Wear sensible clothing, suitable to the season, as well as for bodily comfort. Eat simple, plain, wholesome food, so that the proper nutrition of the body is assured.

Drink freely and regularly of pure water. Bathe frequently. Your body needs water.

Rest and sleep regularly for tis thus that life is renewed. Shun that dismal trio of afflictions: worry, grief and fear. They are ever destructive influences.

Above all, avoid constipation. Keep your stomach, liver and bowels, at all times, healthy and active.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—Mystery in the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad failure? A good many public men think so. So much so that it probably will be congressionally investigated next winter. Bankers' influence is suspected—an attempt to freeze out the smaller fry. Otherwise how could so great and prosperous a system go on the rocks so suddenly?

"No mystery at all," says B. F. Yoakum, dean of the country's big transportation men. "The St. Paul road," he continued, "grew great and rich with the growth of the great, rich, agricultural middle northwest. But its territory was limited. Finally a time came when the management realized it must expand, build to the Pacific. Otherwise it inevitably was going to be swallowed up by other powerful roads which were readier to do so."

"In the light of what now is past history," said the veteran railroad man, "we can see that it would have been better if the St. Paul hadn't done this, but it was impossible to tell in advance what was about to happen. The extension, of course, was expensive. To meet its cost it was necessary for the road to have a thriving traffic over its new line. And just at this juncture, his prosperity props were knocked from under the farmer."

"The answer to the puzzle is perfectly plain. It is, as Operating Receiver H. E. Byrum concisely and accurately puts it, 'Depressed agriculture.' He adds, 'On western railroads agricultural products form a much larger proportion of the total tonnage than on roads serving other sections of the country.'"

"RAILROAD and farm prosperity are interdependent. Impoverishment of either means impoverishment of the other. A decrease in the farmer's purchasing power means reduced incomes to the stockholders. Railroad managers appreciate the vast difference between the farmer's power to buy only the scant supplies of what he must have and his ability to buy all he ought to have. To railroads it means the difference between big steady earnings and much reduced earnings—the difference between prosperity and hard times."

"No railroad serving an agricultural section, with prosperous farmers as its patrons, will suffer, under any conditions, a serious loss of revenue. If the farmers have money, their patronage will offset other adverse conditions that may overtake the railroads. No other favorable conditions will offset the railroad losses inevitable from agricultural depression."

"NEVER was there a better illustration of this than the story of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul. With farm prosperity, it grew, by degrees, into a system of towering strength in the transportation world, serving a splendid country and industrial communities. With farm depression—from the height of its strength, in a few years, a receivership."

"AND the point of this story is: The railroads need fear neither loss nor criticism by helping—not financially—to establish a national system of marketing under which the farmer will be insured his justifiable share of the prices paid by the last buyer of his goods—the ultimate consumer. On the contrary, they will aid greatly in eliminating both—by friendly co-operation with the farmer."
