Boy Murderer Escapes Capital Punishment

A negro boy of about 14 years of age was convicted and sentenced to death for a most atrocious murder, which was deliberately planned and cunningly and horribly executed.

An appeal was taken for the purpose of inducing the Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma to modify the death penalty because of the age of the perpetrator, and in Ridge v. State, 229 Pacific Reporter, 649, that court reduced the punishment to imprisonment for life in the penitentiary.

In discussing the case, Mr. Justice Bossey, who wrote the opinion of the court, said in part:

"If this offender had been a person of mature years and understanding, under circumstances like these, this court would not hesitate for a moment in affirming a death penalty. But here our juvenile statutes and the policy of the law towards juvenile offenders are involved. The state has always refused to hold children responsible for their civil contracts, and since the enactment of our juvenile statutes their criminal responsibility has been modified."

"It is fair to assume that since the Legislature has given to courts and juries a wide discretion between the maximum and the minimum punishment, and in addition to that has given to the court the power and duty of modifying punishments, it was the intention of the Legislature that the death penalty should be inflicted only where the offender was both culpable and responsible in the superlative degree."

"This crime was reprehensible in the highest degree, but the record shows that the perpetrator, by reason of his youth, his lack of home training, and unfavorable environment, probably had no adequate comprehension of the enormity of the offense or of his criminal responsibility."

"It is a hard problem to solve; but, after a most careful consideration in all of its aspects, we think that, as a matter of law, stripped of all sentimental considerations, the jury abused its discretion in ascribing the death penalty, that the sentence and judgment should be modified to life imprisonment, and that the penalty as so modified should be exacted to the limit."

"The record shows that this boy is possessed of only ordinary intelligence, coupled with degenerate criminal tendencies, making it unsafe to ever again give him his liberty. For the safety of society he should be kept in the penitentiary at hard labor."
