Increase and Punishment of Crime

News and Observer. There are many things we can learn from England as well as teach our British cousins some things we do better. The one thing we should learn is how to secure a reduction in crime. Sir William Joynson-Hicks, who has been studying conditions now with conditions fifty years ago, says that fifty years ago there were 20,000 persons in local jails in England and 10,000 persons doing penal servitude. Today there are only 8,000 persons in local jails and 1,000 doing penal servitude. The population, too, has increased in that time. Why has crime increased in this country? Here are some of the answers:

1. So many half-baked and untaught immigrants have come into this country, unaccustomed to our ideas of liberty, that they think it means they can do as they please and neither try to acquaint themselves with the laws nor to obey them.

2. Prohibition is held responsible for the crime wave in some sections, the argument being that many people break that law because they resent it, and becoming accustomed to break one law they lose all restraint and break other laws. It is agreed that prohibition having made the sale and manufacture of liquor therefore legal, illegal, the number of violations of law has increased.

3. The automobile comes in for its share of the blame. Much of the time of courts is taken up with suits growing out of automobile accidents and the stealing and reckless driving add to the number of cases on the criminal docket. This is new.

4. The absence of home training and home discipline is blamed for the increase of crime by youthful offenders. Judges frequently call attention to the increased number of boys and youths arrested for criminal actions. There seems to be no doubt that there is need for better home training and a restoration of old-time instruction. In an article in The Atlantic Monthly for August on the religious revolution, Dr. Charles W. Eliot touched upon a need that Christian people have been troubled about. He said: The third section of the American people in respect to religion contains tens of millions of men and women who take no interest in any religious doctrine or practice. Their children get no religious instruction at home or abroad and grow to maturity without knowledge of Christianity or any other religion and are densely ignorant of the fundamental moralities and of good manners.

No experiment on so vast a scale has ever been tried since time began as these are now trying, namely, bringing up children without any religious instruction or any transmission to rising generations of the moral traditions handed down through primitive, barbarous and civilized peoples in succession.

The unchurched, however, have aroused all over the United States an unexpected opposition to their theories and practices, an opposition which is gathering great strength but is not yet organized for effective work. This opposition comes from teachers, principals, school superintendents and committeemen who see plainly in their own school-rooms the effects of depriving children of religious instruction.

What are the remedies? We have reduced the number and increased the quality of immigrants, which, at least in part, meets the first cause assigned. Prohibition is not the cause of other crimes. It is here and here to stay. Just as soon as those now defiant of law recognize that fact, and just as soon as there is a systematic concurrent resolve to enforce the law, violations for that cause will decrease. Moreover, experience has proved that drinking is the fruitful mother of crime. With enforcement of prohibition most other crime will be reduced. As to the fourth, the parents and the schools and the churches have a compelling duty and responsibility. Parents cannot shift their responsibility on preachers and teachers, and they cannot "pass the buck to home failure. Each has its responsibility. The State, as represented by its juvenile courts and reformatories, has its large restraining and reforming function, as well as its punishment function.

"What about the time a bull tossed you over the hedge?"

"That wasn't an accident," replied the other. "He did it on purpose."

Quaker Heat is Quicker Heat—and Cleaner too

The Quaker Pipeless Furnace is built of heavy riveted boiler plate steel—and steel radiates heat three times as fast as cast iron. That is why Quaker heated homes are always so comfortable on cold mornings. Just open the draft and up through the Quaker Register pours an enormous volume of warm, pure, clean air. Before you buy a furnace, find out about the

QUAKER "The Pipeless Furnace that is built of Steel"

It not only gives you quicker heat but more of it from the same fuel. Every corner of every room is warmed thoroughly. It's cleaner too because every joint is riveted tight like a steam boiler. Can't leak gas, soot or ashes like the cement joints of cast iron furnaces do. Fire pot is lined with high temperature fire bricks. Hold heat extra long. Won't crack nor burn out. Handy water filter outside of furnace keeps air moist and pure. The Quaker is the ideal heating plant for homes, schools, churches and stores. Easily and quickly installed in any old or new building.
