

Some Things "Won't Wash"

There are many fine fabrics which will not stand the ordeal of the wash-tub. Some of the most desirable goods cannot be made shrink-proof nor can some of the most attractive colors be fixed in the fabric so as to combat the effect of water.

These fabrics should be sent to us for cleaning by our modern, scientific methods.

DINNER STORIES

Trick of Fate.
Two years ago Gordon Ingalls, Chicago oil promoter, was sentenced to the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth for using the mails to defraud. He sold stock in a "hopeless" Arkansas well. Now he is a free man again.

While Ingalls was behind bars fate took a hand. The oil property developed gushers and has since become one of the most valuable in the Eldorado district. The corporation organized by Ingalls has been released from receivership and is now booming.

But Ingalls has been ousted.
Obviously Bright.
Hubby: "Miss Judson is a very bright woman, judging by my conversation with her."
Wife: "What did she say?"
Hubby: "Not much, but she approved of everything I said."

Of Course.
The new guest at the not too exclusive house was being shown to his room.
"I presume—oh—every one here dresses for dinner?" he inquired of the maid who was taking him up.
"Oh, yer, sir," replied the little woman, seriously. "Any meals in bed are extra!"

"A gentleman wishes to see you, Mr. Graboon."
"What does he want?" asked that successful captain of industry.
"He says he's an old college friend of yours who is now on the ragged edge of a misspent life."
"Ah! He wants to negotiate a loan. Just go back and tell him it's painful for me to meet old college chums, as he will doubtless recall that I was expelled in my sophomore year."

"A woman's work is never done," she said, as dinner came on the table an hour late.
"So I observe," he answered, gloomily, as he pushed away the potatoes.

Good Advice.
C. M. Sturkey in Chaitown News.
I just heard a rich one. A man told me that upon close investigation he had found that a man who squeezed his money was never known to squeeze his wife.
In looking over our subscription books I have come to the conclusion that there are a lot of wives hereabouts that would be surprised if their husbands should squeeze them. You know a lot of fellows think that they should stop making love to their wives after they are married. Why, a man told me the other day that he thought it was foolish for a man to kiss his wife. That fellow will be surprised some day to come home unexpectedly and find some other man kissing her. Love is part of the makeup of women and when it dies in her, it is like part of her body withering away. Surprise your wife, give her a squeeze, and then you may surprise me by paying your subscription.

Miss Helen Wills, the United States women's tennis champion, will be 20 years old October 6th next. She was only 17 when she first won the title.

Stewart Washington Letter

BY CHARLES P. STEWART
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—The amount of bunk that has come out of Swampscott about President Coolidge this summer is something old Washington correspondents say they never saw equalled about any previous president in all their combined recollections. There's been more real news about previous presidents—oh, plenty more—but never so much pure guff, in the same length of time.

THE "presidential spokesman" has been a great help to the Swampscott correspondents all summer. Almost everybody knows about the "presidential spokesman." He was born of the fact that the president mustn't be quoted in the newspapers. That's a tradition—a silly one, too. Nevertheless it exists. So, when the president says anything the papers want to print, which is everything he does say, inasmuch as the press has to have some kind of an authority for it, the correspondents got to putting it into the mouth of a "presidential spokesman."

IN due season the public got onto this—comprehended that the "presidential spokesman" in reality was the president himself talking. Consequently the "spokesman's" utterances soon began to be accepted as coming right from the fountain head—what he was quoted as saying carried heaps of weight.

THEN one day one of the correspondents—nobody knows just who started it—thought up a yarn all by himself that he was anxious to put across with all the "presidential spokesman's" authority. Well, why shouldn't he? He cogitated. "Presidential spokesman" was a vague term, after all—like a "prominent member of the lower house," a "leading senator" or a "well known statesman." Lots of politicians consider themselves "presidential spokesmen." So the correspondent attributed this fragment of his own imagination to a "presidential spokesman," and lo and behold it worked. Now all the correspondents do the same thing more or less—though of course nobody admits it.

WELL, the "presidential spokesman" has been working overtime at Swampscott. They say the president himself doesn't like it—that he's bawled the correspondents out on account of a lot of the things they were wishing onto him. But there isn't much he can do about it. Suppose he denies some story concerning him. The correspondents are sorry they were misled, but they got it from a "presidential spokesman"—at least that's what he said he was. The "spokesman's" pants are too intangible to be kicked, so they get away with it.

LOVE AND POLITICS IN WILSON REGIME

Mrs. Josephus Daniels Tells of a Courtship That Overshadowed His Candidacy.
Raleigh News and Observer.
The inside story of a courtship that overshadowed a presidential candidacy is told for the first time in this week's Liberty by Mrs. Josephus Daniels, wife of the secretary of the navy during President Wilson's administration.

"When Mrs. Woodrow Wilson became an Asses. and Not a Liability," reveals how the Democratic party leaders all but succumbed to fright before December 18, 1915, when Edith Bolling Galt and Woodrow Wilson were married.
"The election in 1916 was admittedly in doubt," Mrs. Daniels writes. "It was a foregone conclusion that Wilson would be renominated by acclamation. It was almost a panic. They were almost all—I mean those in official positions in and around Washington—of the opinion that if the President remarried before November, 1916, he would destroy all chances of re-election. Looking back from this distance, it is not easy to understand why they were so convinced; but it became an obsession with them. Many informal conferences were held. What could be done? Could anything be done?
"The wives of the politicians and other women had decided views. The first Mrs. Wilson had been dead only a little less than a year. They didn't like the idea of his remarrying so soon. 'Let him wait until after the presidential election if he must marry again.' That was the opinion on Capitol Hill. While that was the opinion as to the aspect in politics, few believed President Wilson would permit political considerations to outweigh an affair of the heart, if his heart were really involved.
"A cabinet member called on my husband in the early fall of 1915 and told of how scores, yes, hundreds, of prominent Democrats all over the country had been coming to see him or writing him letters. He said they all believed that victory the next year was impossible if the President remarried before the election. Senators, members of the House of Representatives, national committeemen, chairmen of state committees, influential editors whose support was essential to secure victory, were quoted.

"He told of a conference of Democratic party leaders that had just been held. 'Then came the shock of my husband's life. At the conference we all decided that you were the man to go to see the President,' the cabinet member said to Mr. Daniels, 'acquaint him with the situation, and urge him to think of the party's success and not to jeopardize history for next year.'
"We discussed at some length the question of who was the best man to go to see the President, and decided upon you because we know his relations with you are those of warm friendship and you have the tact to do it in the best way."
"It is not necessary to quote the words Mr. Daniels employed in declining the distinction of being Minister Plenipotentiary and Ambassador Extraordinary to the President of the United States.
"Asked by a friend why he had been so firm in his refusal to try to persuade Woodrow Wilson to delay his marriage, Mr. Daniels afterward said:
"As a matter of fact, if I had felt as deeply about the matter as my colleague, and my acquaintance with Mrs. Edith Galt had justified such action, my mission would have been to her and not to the prospective bridegroom. If she could have been persuaded to postpone the day, because delay was essential to the election of Mr. Wilson, success might have been possible. But no man after pressing his suit, could ever draw back with honor. My colleague, intent only on carrying the next election, had failed to take that into consideration."

"So she refuses to give you back your ring. Well, you can't make her."
"Perhaps not, but the installment man can."
