The weekly meeting of the Concord Rotary Club will be held tomorrow at 12:30 o'clock at the Y. M. C. A.

Don't fail to read the opening chapter of our new serial story, "Winds of Chance," published today on the last page.

Dr. S. E. Buchanan held a clinic for the vaccination against smallpox Monday evening in Kannapolis. A number of people were present to take the vaccine.

Members of Company E are asked to be at the Army tonight to get the pay which is due to the personnel of the local militia. It is said that a large percentage of the enrollment is expected to be present.

Spartanburg won the first game from Richmond in the inter-league game. Carter was the hitting star of the game, driving out three home runs. Spartanburg tied the score in the ninth and won out in the tenth 7 to 6.

Mrs. Caleb H. Richmond died Friday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. G. L. Cunningham, at Cunningham, N. C. She was 83 years of age and had been an invalid for several years. Mrs. Richmond was a kinswoman of a number of Concord people, having visited here on several occasions.

Persons who are interested in the kindergarten and the school of expression for the coming year are asked to get in touch with Mr. Blanks, who is considering continuing this work again this year. A number of mothers have already inquired about the kindergarten, it is said.

Pittsburgh and Washington strengthened their leads in the National and American leagues, respectively, Monday by winning while their chief opponents were either idle or being defeated. The world series will begin on October 7th and these two teams seem certain to have places clinched.

Dr. J. Henry Highsmith, supervisor of high schools in North Carolina, will confer with high school principals of this county here Saturday morning. The conference will be held at the court house at 9:30 o'clock, according to tentative plans adopted by Prof. J. B. Robertson and Prof. A. S. Webb.

The condition of R. P. Benson, who suffered a stroke of apoplexy Saturday night, is reported today as slightly improved. Mr. Benson is still at the Concord Hospital, where he was carried Saturday night, and his condition is still so serious that he is not allowed to see visitors.

Defendants tried in recorder's court Monday afternoon were assessed $222.50. Of this amount $111.55 was paid after court was adjourned and other defendants were allowed until tomorrow afternoon to raise the additional $110.95. One defendant must pay $75.95, his fine and costs being the heaviest of the court session.

There is no change in the water situation here, it is reported. Cold Water Creek is flowing about normally now and as a result the city is securing water to meet all needs. While no heavy rains have fallen here, there has been sufficient fall on the city's watershed to keep the supply normal during the past week.

Weather reports from Washington still insist that much cooler weather is coming to North Carolina this week. Alabama was struck by a cold wave Saturday, but from that state the coolness seems to have vanished for it never reached North Carolina. Temperatures here Monday were high again, with a big drop after sundown.

J. M. Hull, of Salisbury, will be in Concord Wednesday to continue plans for the intercity bicycle race which is to be held at some time in the future, the date to be announced later. The race was to have been held today but owing to the heat and to the fact that repairs are underway at the Y, it was decided to postpone it until later.

G. F. Rodgers has sold to F. A. Rodgers for $100, property in Kannapolis, according to a deed filed Monday. Another deed records the sale of property in No. 4 township by W. C. Yates to the Kidd-Frix Co. for $650, and still another records the sale of property in No. 10 township by J. F. Shinn to G. H. Barbee for $7,500.

Champion Cotton Picker Has Only One Arm. Monroe Enquirer.

The Enquirer has found the champion cotton picker of the country. He is C. C. Williams, who lives six miles southeast of Monroe on the Belk Mill road, and one day last week he picked 220 pounds.

Not so much, do you say? But Mr. Williams is a one-armed man, and those who have seen him pick cotton say he is a wonder, and can do as much work in a day as the average worker with two good hands.

Mr. Williams' little nine-year-old nephew Faison Williams, of Unionville, son of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Willie, spent last week with him and helped pick cotton on his uncle's farm. One day the little fellow picked 204 pounds.

C. C. Williams is a good farmer, and despite his handicap has made a good crop and is not complaining of weather conditions.

Post and Flag's Cotton Letter. New York, Sept. 14.—The market has again shown great strength and has absorbed realizing and hedge selling with ease. New buying from both trade and speculative sources has been encouraged by an increasing number of reports of crop deterioration due to excessive rains in the belt. Drygoods advices are also very encouraging and there is apparently an almost insatiable demand for cotton goods.

The market, however, has had an almost uninterrupted advance and while sentiment on the floor is extremely bullish caution on the long side of the market would appear advisable for the moment as a reaction of some sort is due shortly.

POST AND FLAG. George Gibson, the new manager of the Chicago Cubs tells this story. There was an ox and a mule that worked side by side in the field. One day the ox shammed sickness and was permitted to remain in its stall. The mule went to work manfully and when he returned was laughed at by the ox. The next day twice the same. The ox again shammed, but the mule went to work. This time when the mule returned the ox asked whether the master said anything. "Said nothing to me," declared the mule, "but I heard him call up the butcher on the telephone."

CHAPTER I

With an ostentatious flourish Mr. Lucky Broad placed a crisp ten-dollar bill in an eager palm out-tretched across his forehead.

"The gentleman wins and the gambler loses!" Mr. Broad proclaimed to the world. "The eye is quicker than the hand, and the dealer's oceans is music to the stranger's ear." With practised touch he rearranged the three worn walnut-shells which constituted his stock in trade.

Beneath one of them he deftly concealed a pellet about the size of a five-grain allopathic pill. It was the erratic behavior of this tiny ball, its mysterious comings and goings, that had summoned Mr. Broad's audience and now held its observant interest.

This audience, composed of roughly dressed men, listened attentively to the seductive monologue which accompanied the dealer's deft manipulations, and was greatly entertained thereby.

"Three tiny tepees in a row and a little black medicine-man inside." The speaker's voice was high-pitched and it carried like a "thirty-thirty." "You see him walk in, you open the door, and—you fumble your money. Awfully simple! Simplicity itself! What? As I live! The gentleman wins ten more—ten silver-tongued song-birds, messengers of mirth—the price of a hard day's toil. Take it, sir, and may it make a better and a stronger man of you. Times are good and I spend my money free. I made it jacking grub to Linderman, four bits a pound, but—easy come, easy go—now them, who's next? You've seen me work. I couldn't baffle a sore-eyed Siwash with snow-glasses."

Lucky Broad's three-legged table stood among some stumps beside the muddy roadway which did service as the main street of Dyea and along which flowed an irregular stream of pedestrians; incidental to his practiced manipulation of the polished walnut-shells he maintained an unceasing chatter of the sort above set down. Now his voice was loud and challenging, now it was apologetic, always it stimulated curiosity. One moment he was jubilant and gay, again he was contrite and querulous. Occasionally he burst forth into plaintive self-dennunciations.

Fixing a hypnotic gaze upon a blond, blue-eyed bystander who had just joined the charmed circle, he murmured, invitingly: "Better try your luck, Olaf. It's Danish dice—three chances to win and one to lose."

The object of his address shook his head. "Aye ant Danish, Aye ban Norwegian," said he.

"Danish dice or Norwegian poker, they're both the same. I'll deal you a free hand and it won't cost you a cent. Fix your baby blues on the little ball and watch me close. Don't let me deceive you. Now then, which bit hides the grain?"

Noting a half-dozen pairs of eyes upon him, the Norseman became conscious that he was a center of interest. He grinned half-heartedly and, after a brief hesitation, thrust forth a clumsy paw, lifted a shell, and exposed the object of general curiosity.

"You guessed it!" There was commendation, there was pleased surprise, in Mr. Broad's tone. "You can't fool a foreigner, can you, boys! My, my, Ain't it lucky for me that you played for me? But you got to give me another chance, Lars; I'll fool you yet. In walks the little pill once more, I make the magic pass, and you follow me attentively, knowing in your heart of hearts that I'm a slick un. Now then, shoot, Kid; you can't miss me!"

"Fix your baby blues on the little ball and watch me close."

The onlookers stirred with interest; with eager fingers the artless Norwegian fumbled in his pocket. At the last moment, however, he thought better of his impulse, grunted once, then turned his back to the table and walked away.

"Missed him!" murmured the dealer, with no display of feeling; then to the group around him he announced, shamelessly: "You got to lead those birds; they fly fast."

One of Mr. Broad's boosters, who had twice won for the Norseman's benefit, carelessly returned his winnings. "Sure!" he agreed. "They got a head like a turtle, them Swedes."

Mr. Broad carefully smoothed out the two bills and reverently laid them to rest in his bank-roll. "Yes, and they got boy mouths. You got to set your hook or it won't hold."

"Slow pickin'," yawned an honest miser with a pack upon his back. Attracted by the group at the table, he had slipped out of the procession in the street and had passed through the crowd to a bet or two.
