EMPLOYEES TRIED TO SHOW FORD AND "BUSTED" AT IT

Disobeyed Instructions and Caused Two Weeks' Delay in Putting Out New Models. Detroit, Sept. 16.—The Detroit Free Press says that an effort of employees at the Ford Motor Company to improve upon methods of Henry Ford caused a delay of two weeks in the production of the new model automobiles of the company.

The story says that Ford had insisted that all parts be worked out in wood before being made into metal to insure perfect fitting. This time, according to the story, several employees, without consulting any one, decided to work direct from the blue prints and for this reason it was impossible to fit together machines shipped to Ford assembly plants throughout the country.

Officials of the Ford company, it is stated, refuse to comment on an article yesterday in The Wall Street Journal asserting that the two weeks' delay had cost the company $5,000,000. It was denied that there had been any wholesale dismissal of employees as a result of the error and also that the error had resulted from the activity of pious mechanics placed in the Ford company plants by a rival motor car company.

Girls to Blame. Editor New York Mirror: I have been amused by Madeline's letter, in which she states that friendship between a married man and a young girl should be encouraged. She cannot understand how her friend's wife should feel hurt because she went out with her husband. It is obvious that Madeline only thinks of enjoyment. Perhaps some day another girl will give her the same pangs as she is inflicting today on the wife whose husband she claims as her friend. ISABEL.

Too Easily Pleaded. Chief Justice Taft said at a dinner in Washington: "I want to see women more particular in their choice of husbands. Too many women are as easily satisfied as Aunt Hannah, the laundress. 'Aunt Hannah,' said a young girl, 'waffo you marry dat ugly ole Wash White?'" "Because, chile," said Aunt Hannah, "Ah prefer a husband who will stop to hum and wring mah clothes, rather in one who will stop away and wring mah heart."

Putting One Over. The girl about to travel alone was warned not to talk to strange men. At the station, the conductor asked: "Where are you going?" "To Detroit," she answered, so he put her on the Detroit train.

Stewart Washington Letter

BY CHARLES P. STEWART NEA Service Writer. WASHINGTON—No prosecution ever went into a case with less enthusiasm than the War Department goes after Col. "Billy" Mitchell, for the roast he gave the army's and the navy's management of their respective aviation services. And no wonder, for here's a situation in which the prosecution is on the defensive, with the accused, quite indifferent as to his own fate, not after a verdict of guilty against his accusers. THE worst of it, from the War Department's standpoint, is that Col. "Billy" can't lose, no matter how the case ends. The War and Navy Departments can hardly do anything else. Suppose the colonel's vindicated. That means he wins, and he can win only on the ground that what he said about aviation was justified—a frightful pair of black eyes for the War and Navy Departments alike. On the other hand, suppose he's found guilty of insubordination, and even deprived of his commission. In that event he's a martyr, a mighty popular one, too, and those

THE BRYAN MEMORIAL

Philadelphia Record. The success or failure of the Bryan memorial movement launched at an enthusiastic meeting in Washington last week will, in our judgment, be largely dependent upon the form the proposed tribute to the Commoner shall take. There is a large body of Mr. Bryan's admirers who see in this memorial undertaking a golden opportunity to utilize public admiration for a great man to promote the propagation of their own views. To prevent this would be an enormous mistake. Mr. Bryan was a man of many interests and varied attainments. His place in American history is not fixed alone by his activities in inculcating his views on prohibition, or on religion, or on any of the political reforms of which he was the sponsor. What impresses our people, as they look back over his record, is that he always for what he conceived to be the welfare of the masses; that he fought with courage, vigor and tenacity for his convictions; that no obstacle were so forbidding and no adverse odds so great as to discourage him; that he had an unlimited capacity for friendships, an uncanny hold upon a tremendous personal following; and that his influence upon the public life of this country, exercised over a long period in which a militant and powerful advocate of the people's rights was indispensable to national progress, was a weighty factor in the solution of many of our most perplexing problems. We need not agree with all of Mr. Bryan's doctrines to recognize his eminence as an American citizen and his faithfulness as a public servant. These are the facts to be borne in mind by the committee of the William Jennings Bryan National Memorial Association, to which will be delegated the task of settling upon the best means of symbolizing the Commoner's services to his fellow-citizens and his place in history. To all pleas for memorial projects, however worthy in themselves, so narrow in scope as to exclude from participation good men and women who want to pay tribute to Bryan the man, the committee should turn a deaf ear. It would be most fitting, it seems to us, if all of Mr. Bryan's services of his country, instead of any service to any particular group, could be commemorated. The association in charge of the movement, we understand, is to be broad enough in its membership to include men and women of all parties and all religions. Let the memorial be equally broad. Let us not go out to the country and say, "This fund we are about to raise is to be devoted to perpetuating the teaching of a doctrinal always for what he conceived to be the welfare of the masses; that he fought with courage, vigor and tenacity for his convictions; that no obstacle were so forbidding and no adverse odds so great as to discourage him; that he had an unlimited capacity for friendships, an uncanny hold upon a tremendous personal following; and that his influence upon the public life of this country, exercised over a long period in which a militant and powerful advocate of the people's rights was indispensable to national progress, was a weighty factor in the solution of many of our most perplexing problems.
