

NEW EVIDENCE FOR AIRCRAFT BOARD'S CONSIDERATION NOW

Board of Inquiry Drops Military Aspects of Aircraft Development to Examine Commercial Side.
MAIL SERVICE IS TO BE STUDIED
Think This Will Form the Basis for Discussion of Commercial Uses of Airplanes in This Country.

Washington, Sept. 23.—(AP)—The President's special air board turned its attention today from the military aspects of aircraft development to the commercial possibilities of air transportation and its present rate of progress.

The board is laying the general course of its inquiry, decided that it should include the commercial field of aviation as well as the military and that a study of the air mail service of the post office department was the logical starting point on that side of the investigation.

Postmaster General New thus was called to open the inquiry into the commercial phase of the aircraft development which has been stressed before the board by high officers of both the army and navy as presenting the best approach to the building up of an adequate reserve of trained pilots for the national defense.

Others invited to appear as witnesses today were Assistant Postmaster General W. Irving Glover, in charge of the air mail service; and Paul Henderson, his predecessor in office.

The board completed its preliminary survey of military air forces with questioning of army and navy authorities.

The declared views of Secretary Wilbur and three ranking admirals placed the navy squarely in line with the majority view of the department in opposing any material change in the present organization of the nation's air defense.

Postmaster General New appearing before the President's special aircraft board, was asked whether he favored the unified air service idea that advocated by Col. William Mitchell and he replied: "I believe the post office department should control its air service."
